AMERICAN STEAMER WRECKED

PACIFIC COAST STORM-LASHED

DOLLAR LINER IN TROUBLE

San Francisco, Oct. 21.

A storm of terrific intensity is lashing the Pacific north-west coast.

The American freighter Floridian has gone ashore on a reef in the mouth of the Columbia River and her crew of thirty men are in great peril.

Such was the force of the gale in Seattle, that the Dollar liner President Madison was torn from her moorings in the harbour. One person was killed and several injured.

From Portland, Oregon, come reports that many salmon fighting boats have been destroyed.

There are no reports of serious mishaps to vessels in the Canadian ports of Vancouver and Victoria adjacent to Seattle.

OMINOUS SILENCE.

A United Press despatch from Portland, Oregon, states that the freighter Floridian at 9.30 a.m. (Pacific Standard Time) sent out an S.O.S. message and then went silent suddenly.

It is believed she has grounded in the gale north of the mouth of the Columbia River, in a particularly dangerous locality. She carries a crew of 32.

M. POINCARÉ BURIED

SIMPLE SERVICE AT NIBECOURT

VAULT IN VILLAGE CEMETERY

(Special to "Telegraph")

Paris, Oct. 21.

The former President of the Republic of France, M. Raymond Poincaré, was laid to his last rest in the family vault of the village cemetery at Nibecourt, today.

Only the members of the statesman's family and his old colleagues, M. Herriot and M. Tardieu, attended the brief ceremonies at which the Bishop of Verdun officiated. The service was extremely simple, in accordance with M. Poincaré's wishes.

President of France during the War and a premier before and after the outbreak of hostilities, M. Poincaré was one of the best known of contemporary statesmen, not only of France but of all the world. He was known for the courage of his policies and his tireless energy, and was one of the most able orators of his time.

A very entertaining evening was given in the Canton Club Theatre on Friday night by Professor Andrews "Hummat," an Indian conjuror and animalist. Hummat is giving two more such shows in the City at the Gaiety Theatre and is expected to have a good audience, since the many Chinese present on Friday showed great appreciation of his powers.

Mr. C. W. A. Scott (right), who is doing so well in the air race to Melbourne, is here seen with Mr. J. A. Mollison. The picture was taken when Scott took off from Lympne on his record-breaking flight to Australia.

AMERICAN STOCK OUTLOOK

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR SPRING

New York, Oct. 20.

Market influences remain predominantly constructive, but considerable further backing and filling is likely. Underlying business forces should justify irregular strengthening of prices over the next several months in anticipation of another important business recovery next spring.

Need for selectivity is particularly important under the type of market now prevailing in which activity should be concentrated in relatively few issues and trading volume restricted.

The following stocks are recommended for purchase as offering the dual attraction of adequate current income plus reasonable appreciation possibilities: American Machine and Foundry, Coca-Cola, Cream of Wheat, General Foods, Hercules Powder, Krueger, Peck and Ford, J. C. Penney, Procter and Gamble, and Wrigley.

General bond prospects appear definitely improved. Purchase of both high and medium quality issues are justified but individual investors should continue to concentrate bond holdings in the middle group.

MOLLISON'S BAD LUCK AT KARACHI

(SPECIAL TO "TELEGRAPH")

(By Telegraph. Copyright Telegraphic Messages Ordinance, 1894. Received, Oct. 22, 10.01 a.m.)

SINGAPORE, OCT. 22.

THE BRITISH AVIATORS SCOTT AND T. CAMPBELL BLACK HAVE ESTABLISHED A GOOD LEAD OVER THEIR RIVALS IN THE AIR MARATHON FROM ENGLAND TO AUSTRALIA, AND HAVE ALREADY LEFT SINGAPORE FOR PORT DARWIN. THEY EXPECT TO ARRIVE AT PORT DARWIN BY DAWN TO-MORROW, COVERING THIS 2,000 MILES LEG NON-STOP IF POSSIBLE.

Approximately five hours behind the British machine the big Dutch air-liner, piloted by K. D. Parmentier and J. J. Moll, is thundering along a different route. In spite of having been lost in the fog for some time, Colonel Roscoe Turner and Clyde Pangborne are flying in third position, about twelve hours behind the leaders. Scott and Black are almost certain to win the race if their luck holds. The race has now developed into a speed test between the British, Dutch and American entries. Only sixteen competitors are now left in the race altogether.

Reports from Singapore state that Scott and Black arrived at 10.23 p.m. (G.M.T.) and departed at 11.03 p.m. flying by way of Kupang, hoping to reach Port Darwin by dawn to-morrow.

From Allahabad, Col. Roscoe Turner and Clyde Pangborne are reported at 10.13 p.m., having landed after repeatedly radioing that they had lost their way and had only ten minutes petrol left. They left for Singapore at 11.45 p.m.

The big Pander 84, Dutch entry, piloted by D. L. Asjes and G. J. Geyssendorfer, has withdrawn from the race after crashing at Allahabad, due to the failure of her retractable undercarriage to operate.

Parmentier and Moll were last reported from Calcutta, having left for Rangoon at 6.20 p.m.

LEADS HANDICAP.

Squadron Leader Malcolm McGregor and Henry Walker, flying the Manawatu Aero Club's entry, New Zealand, are leading the handicap list. They left Baghdad at 10.32 p.m. (G.M.T.) and the majority of the others are still at Athens.

C. J. Melrose, the lone Australian flier, described his flight from Rome to Brindisi as the worst he had ever experienced. He was obliged to rise to 14,000 feet and fly blindly through mist and snow for five hours.

The following is the chronological story of the race as supplied from airport to airport by Reuter:

DUTCHMEN CRASH.

Allahabad, Oct. 21. One of the most prominent of the contesting planes in the London-Melbourne air race, the big Dutch Syndicate Pander 84, piloted by D. L. Asjes and G. J.

Air Commodore Sir Charles Kingsford Smith, who has arrived at Suva, the Fiji Islands, in his magnificent flight from Brisbane. He hopes to reach San Francisco.

to find the aerodrome here.

MOLLISON'S AWAY.

Karachi, Oct. 21.

The Mollison finally got away for Allahabad, having been forced to turn back three times owing to engine trouble or weather conditions, and having dropped well behind the leaders after themselves settling the pace.

Another British Comet, flown by Cathart Jones and K. F. H. Waller has arrived here safely after delays.

LEADERS SAFE AT SINGAPORE

Singapore, Oct. 21.

The British Comet, leading the great air marathon to Melbourne, made a perfect landing here at 10.30 o'clock to-night, under the skilled hands of C. W. A. Scott, flying with T. Campbell Black.

BOEING FINDS WAY.

Allahabad, Oct. 21.

Turner and Pangborne found their way here at 10.26 p.m. G. M. T.

PORT DARWIN NEXT.

Singapore, Oct. 21.

After a brief stop here, Pilots Scott and Black leaders in the air race to Melbourne, left for Port Darwin, Australia, at 11.42 p.m.

They headed out confidently on their last leg, but one, still approximately five hours ahead of their nearest rivals.

NOT TRYING TO GAIN.

Rangoon, Oct. 21.

Parmentier and Moll arrived here at 10.15 and took off again at 10.47 p.m., only stopping long enough to snatch food and take on new fuel supplies.

Parmentier said they were not trying to overtake the British plane flown by Scott and Black.

STILL IN RACE.

Karachi, Oct. 21.

Jones and Waller, British fliers in a Comet plane, took off from here at 10 o'clock, having been delayed by fog. They are making good time, in spite of their accidents and are still given a chance to take a prize in the race.

NARROW ESCAPE.

Singapore, Oct. 21.

When Scott and Black landed here their plane bumped badly.

VOLUNTEERS MOVE ON HULIN

Kirin, Oct. 21.

Information reaching here from Eastern Kirin states that a strong body of anti-Manchukuo troops, which has been engaged in fights with the Manchukuo-Japanese garrison troops since last Thursday, is advancing on the suburbs of Hulin, where a part of the Manchukuo troops are reported to have gone over to the anti-Manchukuo side.

The local military authorities have sent telegrams to Kirin City asking for reinforcements.

RITUAL OF MURDER

SAMBURA TRIBE WARRIORS HELD

FOR DEATH OF BRITON

(Special to "Telegraph")

Nairobi, Oct. 21. Owing to a continuation of the ritual of murder by young warriors of the Sambura tribe, the Government has issued a proclamation prohibiting the young men carrying arms.

Five more arrests have been made in connection with the death of the Englishman, Theodore Powys, killed in Loipia district, Kenya, in 1931. The Sambura tribesmen reported that he had been mauled by a lion.

However, police investigated for many months and finally, early this month, made the first arrests. The ritual of murder consists in the slaying of a victim and the dipping of young warriors' spears in his blood.

General Business Improving

PREDICTIONS OF U.S. OBSERVERS

18,000,000 PEOPLE ON RELIEF

Washington, Oct. 21.

Political observers predict that Washington developments during the next week or so will be moderately encouraging and constructive.

There are definite signs of improving business sentiment. October business returns are somewhat better than those of September, while November and December will probably show further slight improvement.

In the month of August there were eighteen million individuals on the Government relief rolls. There are indications that popular enthusiasm for the "New Deal" is probably waning.

The establishment of a Central Bank is considered unlikely as the Government policy is now toward a strong Federal Reserve Board controlled indirectly by the Treasury. The N.R.A. Board continues to progress slowly.

More liberal Government loans are planned for many of the railroads. Receiverships are expected among a few of the roads which are burdened with excessive bonded indebtedness. The rail traffic outlook is not particularly good at present.

At to-morrow's meeting of the H.K. Rotary Club the speaker will be Miss Betty Compton, whose subject is entitled "An Interview with a Rotarian."

and very nearly overturned when caught by a sudden gust of wind. A large crowd at the airport gave them a great welcome.

Scott, interviewed, described the journey from Allahabad as appalling but said their engine was having splendidly. He had expected to arrive at Singapore at 5.15 a.m. (local time) but decided to reduce speed and nurse the engine and make a daylight landing.

They expect to fly to Port Darwin non-stop if possible.

Vice Grows In America

PROHIBITIONISTS' CAMPAIGNING

(Special to "Telegraph")

Washington, Oct. 21.

In connection with the first statistics of the year since repeal of prohibition, Superintendent McBride of the Anti-Saloon League, says that aggregated vice has increased considerably.

Drinking among minors has increased to a deplorable degree, he adds.

The Anti-Saloon League, right wing of the Prohibitionists' attacking forces, is once again campaigning intensively for reform, maintaining that with the breaking up of the racketeering gangs which controlled the illicit liquor trade during the days of the Volstead Act's life, the country is now safe for prohibition.

NORTH-SOUTH RAPPROCHEMENT

Leaders Planning Conference

Shanghai, Oct. 22. Chinese political leaders are actively discussing the possibilities of bringing heads of various political groups together in working out a national salvation programme following the arrival of Dr. Wang Chung-hui from the South.

Dr. Wang is believed to have brought with him certain substantial proposals from the Southern leaders. He had a lengthy talk with Dr. H. H. Kung yesterday afternoon, after which Dr. Kung wired Marshal Chiang Kai-shek asking him to name a date and place to meet Dr. Wang.

A services' whist drive will be held at the European Y.M.C.A. this evening at 9 o'clock.

The tea party arranged in honour of the H.K. Commissioner of the St. John Ambulance Brigade has been indefinitely postponed.

The Ben Line S.S. Benares is due here from Singapore and Manila on the 27th instant.

£40,000,000 Spent on
Cinemas In Year

STRIKING FIGURES

The amount paid by the public for admission to cinemas during last year was £40,200,000.

This figure was quoted to the Economic Science Section of the British Association meeting at Aberdeen, recently, by Mr. S. Rowson, of London.

He also revealed that the revenue from the Entertainment Tax on cinema admissions last year was £6,700,000.

A detailed analysis of over 300,000,000 tickets bought during the first half of this year in more than 2,000 cinemas showed, said Mr. Rowson, that the average price paid for admission was a fraction over 10d.

In Britain there were 958,000,000 admissions a year, or an average of 18,500,000 a week, and Ireland raised the total to 19,250,000,000.

Out of 475 imported films registered last year for distribution in Great Britain, 330 were registered by nine American-owned companies directly representing leading American film-producing enterprises. The value of these films was 90 or even 95 per cent. of the total. The net value of remittances to the United States in 1933 in respect of films was about £5,300,000, but against this had to be set the receipt from abroad of £600,000 on account of British films.

"There is no market in the world," said Mr. Rowson, "not even the bazaar in the Far East, in which the art of bargaining is exercised with such great skill as in the sale of films."

AN UNUSUAL CINEMA.

The Royal Naval Cinema at Gibraltar is probably unique in the film world, for it is entirely the property of the naval ratings concerned, and run for the exclusive benefit of the personnel stationed on the Rock and their families.

It is no "amateur" undertaking, but a first-class theatre, showing thoroughly up-to-date programmes. With that thoroughness characteristic of all its undertakings the Navy supervises every department, whilst the audience itself is critical and good-humouredly exacting.

The cinema dates back to the old silent days of 1920, when a seaplane shed utilised by American seaplanes during the war was converted into a theatre. The enterprise was financed by the men's own moneys, and was restricted to Service men and their families. With the coming of the talkies the show was temporarily closed, but reopened again on the last day of 1931 fully equipped for talkies.

Commander I. W. Whitehorn, R.N., the commanding officer of H.M.S. Cormorant, the depot ship of the committee administering the affairs of the cinema, and Paymaster Commander L. J. Graham, R.N., is honorary secretary and treasurer. The manager is Chief Petty Officer Writer H. Boshier and the chief operator, Petty Officer A. G. Baker.

The theatre has a capacity of over 600, and the entire profits are devoted to benevolent and recreational activities of the Gibraltar command.

ONE cupful white breadcrumbs, one tablespoonful jam, one dessertspoonful moist sugar, one teaspoonful castor sugar, one-quarter cupful hot milk, one egg. Pour hot milk over breadcrumbs and allow them to stand. Well grease a small pie dish and place jam in bottom. Separate the yolk of egg from white. Well whip yolk and stir it into breadcrumbs, adding moist sugar. Put this mixture on top of the jam and put in the oven to allow it to set. Meanwhile whip the white of egg to a stiff froth with a little of the castor sugar. When the mixture is set take it from oven and cover with white of egg, lightly stirring the rest of the sugar into the meringue. Now put dish back into the oven and leave it until the meringue is brown and crisp.

Federation, which is organising the movement here.

He says:—"I am glad to know of the successful result of the campaign against undesirable films and especially to learn of the valuable and widespread co-operation which you are receiving from the other dioceses in England and Wales. The campaign seems to me to be organised on sound and prudent lines, and in a way that cannot possibly give offence to any right-minded person. May God bless and prosper your efforts."

SIR CEDRIC HARDWICKE COMPLETES WORK.

Sir Cedric Hardwicke has finished his work on "The King of Paris," the British and Dominions satire on stage folk and their ways. The shooting schedule was carefully arranged in order to give him the chance of making an early start with his theatrical tour, the scenes in which he appears being filmed first. Meanwhile plenty of work remains to be done on the film by the other members of the company.

EXPEDITION TO ASIA

DROUGHT-PROOF
GRASS WANTED

PROTECTING PRAIRIE STOCK

Washington, Oct. 10. Because the great drought turned millions of acres of fertile farm lands and grazing pastures into a parched sterile desert the U.S. Agricultural Department is sending an expedition into Central Asia to search for pasture grasses that will resist drought.

In the present crisis millions of starving cattle and sheep had to be bought and slaughtered by the government because there was no hope of feeding them then or in the near future. The introduction of a "drought proof" grass would do much to prevent the repetition of such a large-scale disaster.

Discussing the expedition, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Henry A. Wallace, said: "On the edge of the Gobi desert in Central Asia are great pasture lands where the summer temperatures often go above 100 degrees and the winter temperatures more than 40 degrees below zero."

"The rainfall in this area is less than 16 inches annually but apparently there are certain pasture grasses which through thousands of years of natural selection have learned to adapt themselves to an environment as severe as that of our great prairie states this past year."

RESISTING CORROSION.

"Most of the rainfall comes in the summer and is sometimes torrential in nature, thus causing erosion. We are hoping to discover not only drought-resistant pasture grasses but also grasses and shrubs with root stocks of a type suitable for preventing wind and water erosion in dry land areas."

"As a leader in charge of the current expedition to the Hinggan Mountains and the plains adjoining the Gobi, the Department has been fortunate to secure the collaboration of Prof. Nicholas Roerich, the internationally recognized authority on Central Asia."

"For the last eleven years Prof. Roerich has made extensive expeditions into Sikkim, Kashmir, Tibet, Chinese Turkestan, Mongolia and the Gobi Desert and Altai region where his exhaustive studies of the scientific and cultural backgrounds of the entire Asiatic field have been second to none."

"Since 1920 he has also been interested in botanical expedition into Western Tibet, studying the medicinal plants of this region. Because of this background which has caused him to be held in high esteem throughout Asia, we are hopeful of an unusually fruitful expedition."

"Accompanying Prof. Roerich are his son, George Roerich, an expert on Central Asia and H. G. MacMillan and J. L. Stephens of the Bureau of Plant Industry, who are fundamentally trained in the study of American grasses."

United Press.

and the effect is likely to be a film famine. Production during the coming season will, it is stated, reach the total of 173 features. The official quota allows for the import of 175 films from other countries, but of those 70 must be silent, so that the industry will have only 278 sound pictures for the whole year's supply.

BRITISH MOTOR RACING FILM.

All the thrills of high speed motor racing will shortly be seen for the first time in a British film. Under the provisional title of "Death Drives Through," Clifford Taylor productions are using this theme for a picture which will feature Robert Douglas, Dorothy Boucher, Miles Mander, Frank Atkinson, Percy Walsh, and Lilian Gunn. Edward L. Cahn will direct.

WOMAN'S LONELY HOME IN NORTH WILDS

QUITE CONTENT AS BRIDE OF VETERAN PROSPECTOR

BECAUSE the culinary art of Beatrice Mason did not include making bread, she won for herself, contrary to what might be anticipated under such circumstances, both a husband and a home, far north of the Arctic circle in a land that has never been surveyed. She does not know for sure whether Masonland, where they live, is in the United States or Canada. The nearest post office is at Fort Yukon Alaska, six hundred miles away, whither the Masons travel once a year for their supplies and the ever-welcome batch of letters that will be waiting them. Their only other mail hour comes when the ever romantic and scarlet-coated figure of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police comes mashing up to Masonland on his winter patrol. Quite impartially, therefore, they patronize the mail service of both the United States and Canada.

Beatrice Mason's arrival in this "no man's land" where hers was ing as manager of the very sanatorium which Archdeacon Stuck had established, so she was not a settler that bound her to civilization and made for the Far North. To-day Beatrice Mason mashes through the trackless woods as did the archdeacon.

When she first arrived at Fort Yukon, though, she found that her manager's duties were in reality those of a cook, which troubled her not at all, though up to then she had done but little cooking. There at Fort Yukon, a settlement of about six hundred Indians and three hundred whites, the meals were plain and the cooking easy, except the bread-making.

It came to pass that when the entire sanatorium, to teach her to make a light brown, crusty loaf of bread, an "old-timer" happened along. He was one Willoughby Mason and offered to coach this newcomer in the subtle art of bread-making, which every dweller of the North must know. Where others failed he succeeded and not only taught her to make good bread but took advantage of those lessons and turned them into courtship periods, finally winning his "pupil" for a bride. They waited until her year at Fort Yukon was up and then there was a simple July wedding in the little log church where the wild arctic flowers provided the floral arch and where her "bridesmaids," as she humorously expresses it, were two members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

VETERAN PROSPECTOR.

For more than twenty years Willoughby Mason had been prospecting and hunting and now he took his wife with him on a six hundred mile journey through the "highways" or rivers of the North. First they went up the Porcupine and then on up the Bell until Masonland was reached. It took three weeks to make the trip in a leisurely fashion, going in a launch that had an engine of twelve horsepower. During the day's run it was nothing to glance shoreward and see a bear, moose or caribou looking with astonishment at the intruders in the land they thought exclusively theirs.

When Mrs. Mason set forth from Fort Yukon, she resolved to prove by example that no matter how far one travelled from civilization one could bring the beautiful into one's daily life. That has been the keynote to the happy life led at Masonland.

HAND MADE LUXURIES.

When the framework of their house was up, hers was the task to smooth the logs on the inside, to make a dressing table from packing cases and shelves from boards for their books. Every luxury they wished must be made from what was at hand, except the stove and the bedsprings they brought with them. She remarked that it was extraordinary how much they packed in that thirty-foot launch and the smaller boat attached, for they transported not only the human beings but seven dogs, toboggans, bedding, clothing, tools and a year's supply of food and other essentials such as gasoline. But the five gallon tin cans of gasoline, when empty, became wash-bowls and water buckets, while the smaller tins served as work baskets and flower boxes.

AMBITION ACHIEVED.

Not having independent means Beatrice enrolled as hygiene and social worker for Fort Yukon. It came about that there was an open-

Two old grape gatherers quenching their thirst during the work in one of the Rhine province farms.

Her woman's touch was needed to make the rooms attractive with curtains, draperies and pillows. The rudely constructed furniture was painted in cheerful, blending tones. True to her idea to draw the beautiful to her home, each year when she returns from Fort Yukon she brings something to embellish the interior, if it is only fresh paint and new muslin for curtains.

Although she is indeed a pioneer woman of the North who must do the washing, cooking, housework and mending, she sets aside an hour or two each day for recreation. In the winter she can go snowshoeing or mush along with her dogs, while indoors she reads and writes and listens to the radio.

RADIO WOES.

At first the Masons were completely isolated, without neighbours or radio. Now they have some Indian neighbours twelve miles away and a radio, which however gives out at most inopportune moments. When they hear the beginning of some momentous news, they may have to wait to know the ending until they reach Fort Yukon the next June. Their neighbours in this northern land are Indians. There is an Indian camp two hundred miles away, with individual families nearer.

The days pass happily for Beatrice Mason at Masonland. It is the first winter that stands out most in retrospect, when they saw no one but themselves for ten months, when they trimmed the Christmas tree with strips of tin curled off from keys used in the opening of cans of food and when, as she writes:

"We were here alone, isolated as if on the moon, without visitors, mail, radio or communication of any kind with the world beyond. There has never been a winter to equal or surpass it. It was ideal to me and the choicest experience of my life."

ROMAN LONDON OF TO-DAY

LONDINIUM WALK LASTS LIFETIME ANCIENT DAYS RECALLED

Visitors to London, and even Londoners themselves, should make a trip round Roman London. The total distance is little more than three miles, but a whole day may well be set apart for it. The trip is full of interest, and, with the aid of a little imagination, a walk round the walls of Londinium will provide memories that may last a lifetime.

The original City wall's enclosure an area of some 350 acres—less than a square mile. The six miles of entry from the surrounding "country" were: Aldgate, Bishopsgate, Cripplegate, Aldersgate, Newgate, and Ludgate.

The starting point should be All Hallows Church, close to the Tower of London—Berkyngeschirch-by-the-Tower, as it was, and still is quaintly described. This church, by the way, is the home of "Toot II."

In the Undercroft of the church, which is open to the public at all reasonable hours, will be found a fascinating model of Roman London as it existed in the early part of the fourth century. The model should be studied carefully before the walk begins. An official of the "Londinium Walk" is always available to explain the model. A booklet, entitled "Roman London," price 3d., may be purchased from the official. It contains some very interesting particulars, and also a lucid map of the area covered by the model, and will, therefore, be found invaluable.

In the Undercroft, some 15 ft. underground, may be seen, in situ a portion of the floor of a Roman shop dating back to the time of Boadicea, in the middle of the first century. Leaving the church, the first point of interest is "Aldgate," which may be reached by way of the Minories, a famous street running parallel with but just outside the line of the City wall. A tablet on the front wall of a building in Aldgate High-street, a few yards east of the Minories, denotes the actual site of the gate. In Roman times the thoroughfare now represented by Aldgate High-street was the main road to Colchester. A few yards west of the gate is the famous Aldgate pump.

Passing through Duke-street and Cannon-street in the direct line of the wall, we arrive at the site of "Bishopsgate," through which visitors from York and Lincoln entered London, then on through Wormwood-street to "London Wall," another famous thoroughfare which needs no explanation. The "Wallbrook," a navigable river in those days, flowed under the City wall at Finsbury-circus, and appeared to have had its source just beyond Moorfields. A portion of the original Roman wall is still in existence, and may be seen as we pass the London Wall. Almost immediately we come to Cripplegate Buildings, one end of which marks the site of the "Cripplegate."

Just beyond "Cripplegate," the wall turned sharp left verging towards the centre of Aldersgate-street, touching the main thoroughfare at the Church of St. Anne and St. Agnes. This marks the site of "Aldersgate." This, presumably, was the farmers' gate since it led to the open country and to a limited area of pastureland. Most of the country outside the wall was forest or marsh, but a few farms existed. Smithfield Market, west of Aldersgate-street, stands on the site of one of the farms.

The wall continued along the northern side of the General Post Office (St. Martins-le-Grand), finally turning sharp left at the Old Bailey, where the Central Criminal Courts are situated. These must not be confused with the Royal Courts of Justice in the Strand, where civil actions only are tried.

The site of "Newgate" is indicated on the wall of the courts in Newgate-street. In Roman times, this thoroughfare was known as Watling-street, and led to Verulamium (St. Albans). The next and last gate, "Ludgate," may be reached through the Old Bailey, which roughly follows the direction of the Wall. A tablet on the front wall of the Church of St. Martin, on Ludgate Hill, slightly to the left of the Old Bailey, marks the site of the gate.

"Ludgate" led the citizens of Londinium to the settlement of Westminster, at which point there was a ford across the Thames.

It is interesting to follow the road from Ludgate a little way towards Westminster. At Ludgate Circus, looking north and south, we see the old valley of the River Fleet, or Holbourne—a very important river in those days. Farringdon-street now occupies the valley. Continuing up Fleet-street and passing Chancery-lane we come to the site of the Temple Bar, at which point the Strand begins. Here, too, are the Royal Courts of Justice.

Along the Strand, past St. Clement Dances Church of "oranges and lemons" fame, and leading down towards the river, is a small opening called Roman Bath Alley, where a Roman bath, still fed by its original spring water, may be seen.

A visit to Waterloo Bridge, now being demolished, will be worth while, since it may be that last opportunity of seeing this famous bridge. Descending by the temporary steps to the Embankment, it can then be determined whether we finish the walk at that point or return along the Embankment, following, as far as possible, the direction of the southern or river wall to the Tower of London, thus completing the circuit.

ALTERNATIVE.

An alternative, and very interesting, conclusion to the trip would be to continue westwards along the Embankment, past Cleopatra's Needle, to Westminster, boarding a "river-bus" at Westminster pier, journeying back to London Bridge by water. The river, of course, is full of general interest, but points of particular interest could be noted on the way, as, for instance, Blackfriars Bridge, where the Fleet River entered the Thames, Cannon-street railway bridge which marks the point where ships of commerce once suited up the river Walbrook.

Finally, London Bridge, some 200 yards beyond which is the site of the original Roman bridge. Disembarking at London Bridge, the walk could be continued through Thames-street, passing in turn the Monument, Billingsgate Fish Market, and the Custom House. We should then be within a few yards of the Tower of London, which marks the easternmost-point of the old City wall.

The student of manners must search the past for origin and example. The man with something to learn about dress may look in a hat for information.

CAR ACCIDENT.

CHINESE GIRL INJURED IN KOWLOON

A motor accident in which Miss Lucie Kwan, a typist employed at the Far East Motors in Nathan Road, received painful injuries to her face, occurred on Friday night on Castle Peak Road near Yenchow Street.

It appears that Mr. C. E. Abbas, a salesman in the company, took out a car for demonstration purposes, accompanied by Miss Kwan who was seated beside him.

Near Yenchow Street, the driver lost control of the car and it crashed into a lamp standard. Miss Kwan was cut about the face by flying glass and Mr. Abbas received a small cut on his forehead. Miss Kwan was admitted to the Kowloon Hospital, where she is at present undergoing treatment. Her condition is not reported to be serious, although she is suffering from slight concussion.

Question Of Culpability

The Editor,

Hongkong Telegraph,

Sir,—In face of the failure of the appeal in the Nullah Murder case, the question of capital punishment again crops up. It will be recalled that Ng Loi-yuen, the defendant in this case, was first tried by an Ordinary Jury who failed to agree on a verdict. He was subsequently retried by a Special Jury who returned a verdict of guilty, but strongly recommended mercy.

Many of us who have followed closely the proceedings throughout this case, still entertain doubt as to whether the defendant could be single-handed and in a drunken state, have managed to pick up five lively children one by one and throw them into the nullah within a very short space of time.

There are others who have expressed doubt as to whether the defendant should not have been guilty of manslaughter instead of murder, in view of the evidence of intoxication. However, a verdict has been rendered by the Special Jury trying the case. Special Jurors are all selected for their proved integrity and sound judgment. Their verdict must, therefore, be accepted as a fair one. We are especially impressed with their fairness in making a strong recommendation for mercy. So reasonable a recommendation, we have no doubt, will be unquestionably accepted and given effect to by the Authority in due course. But we are told that in a case not long ago, the recommendation for mercy by an Ordinary Jury was disregarded. Whatever reason there might have been for the course of action in that case, we sincerely hope that the recommendation in the present case will not meet with the same fate.

Besides the special circumstance in this case which would seem fully to warrant sparing the poor fellow his life, the fact that the recommendation for mercy was made by a Special Jury, ought to carry some weight. Moreover, it should be noted that this recommendation was not made merely by reason of general objection to capital punishment, as none of the Special Jurors took advantage of the Chief Justice's offer to excuse any one having such conscientious objection from serving. CLEMENT.

PACIFIC FLIGHT.

KINGSFORD SMITH'S NEW RECORD.

Brisbane, Oct. 20.

Air-Commodore Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith, accompanied by Captain P. G. Taylor, a wireless operator and navigator, hopped off from Brisbane at 4.5 a.m. (2.5 a.m. Hongkong time) on the first stage of a daring attempt to reach California.

The weather was beautifully clear, a full moon turning night almost into day.

The route used by Kingsford-Smith, on his previous trans-Pacific crossing from east to west is being used for the present attempt.

The daring aviators will make a non-stop flight to Suva, the capital of the small islands of Fiji, a distance of 1,825 miles, a second non-stop hop from Suva to Honolulu (3,288 miles) and the third lap from Honolulu to San Francisco (2,408 miles). The total distance involved is 7,521 miles.

Kingsford-Smith's machine, which has been named "Lady Southern Cross" is a Lockheed Altair tri-motored monoplane, which was purchased by public subscription in order to allow the intrepid aviator to participate in the Melbourne Centenary Race. An untimely mishap to the machine prevented Kingsford-Smith from leaving Australia in time to reach Mildenhall in time for the start of the race.—United Press.

"All O. K."

San Francisco, Oct. 21.

The Matson liner Monterey, whose position is approximately midway between Auckland and Suva, reports that it is intercepting wireless messages from Kingsford-Smith. The last message received stated that "all were o.k. aboard the Lady Southern Cross."—United Press.

Arrival at Suva.

Suva, Fiji, Oct. 21.

During the whole history of aviation only one aeroplane has ever flown across the Pacific to land on Fijian shores.

That was in June, 1928, when, flying over the intervening 3,288 miles of ocean separating Fiji from Honolulu, Kingsford-Smith piloted the "Southern Cross" safely across the ocean from San Francisco to Brisbane.

At 4 p.m. to-day (Sydney Time) the same aviator, piloting the "Lady Southern Cross", made a beautiful landing at Albert Park.

The whole European and native population of Suva turned out to welcome the daring aviator and his companions. Kingsford-Smith receiving an uproarious ovation as he stepped from the machine.

As compared with the 21 hours it took the old "Southern Cross" to fly from Suva to Brisbane in 1928, the present hop occupied only 12 hours 5 minutes.

The machine behaved perfectly during the whole flight, the weather, unlike that encountered on the memorable Suva-Brisbane flight, being clear.—United Press.

LESSON SERMON.

FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST, HONGKONG

"Doctrine of Atonement" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, yesterday.

The Golden Text was "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark 10:45).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved" (John 3:16,17).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "While we adore Jesus, and the heart overflows with gratitude for what he did for mortals,—treading alone his loving pathway up to the throne of glory, in speechless agony exploring the way for us,—yet Jesus spares us not one individual experience, if we follow his commands faithfully; and all have the cup of sorrowful effort to drink in proportion to their demonstration of his love, till all are redeemed through divine Love" (p. 26).

MOTOR-DRIVING TESTS

There cannot be many respects in which Hongkong gives the lead to the Mother Country, but in one instance at least this Colony has long enforced a regulation which the Ministry of Transport contemplates putting into effect. This is the submission of applicants for driving licences to tests of their fitness to handle motor vehicles. Such tests have long been in vogue in many continental countries and are said to have been responsible for reducing the number of accidents on the roads. It is doubtless the relative failure of all other measures to make roads safer which has now induced the Ministry of Transport to draft regulations on the subject and to circulate them to motoring organisations. The steps already taken have prevented the number of traffic casualties from increasing to any marked extent, but the public is demanding that still more should be done than to stabilise the accident rate at its present alarming level. The new regulations are designed to ensure in new applicants for licences a certain minimum efficiency in the handling of their vehicles, since it is expected that the raw beginner will have to shed a good deal of his rawness before he is let loose on the roads. Obviously, that will still leave a large part of the problem untouched, especially as it is intended to apply the regulations only to newcomers. These should start off with a keener sense of their responsibilities than has been the case hitherto. But the vast majority of present licence-holders will not be affected by the change, in which connection it is worth bearing in mind that hitherto any individual, even though he might be deaf or crippled in such a manner as to make it impossible for him to exercise complete control over his car, has been able to obtain a licence by merely filling in a form and paying the necessary fee. When all is said and done, whatever the restrictions imposed may be, the human element enters very largely into this question. Useful as tests are, it is conceivable that an individual might pass them with flying colours and still be a menace to other road-users. The selfish, impetuous, or reckless driver is not magically

NOTES OF THE DAY

BRITISH BUSINESS

Britain, both in the value of its overseas trade and in the profits of its industries is shown by the past half year's statistics to be still upon the upgrade. Foreign trade of £552,000,000 for the six months ending June 30, 1934, was larger by £56,000,000 than in the Economist of London, a weekly financial journal, were 18 per cent. better than in the same period a year ago. Overseas commerce as measured by the Government Board of Trade was up by 13 per cent. in the import column and by 8 per cent. in that of exports. The increase in imports was largely in raw materials, that is £25,000,000 out of £42,000,000.

MORE TREATIES

Restrictions making for ultimate freedom of trade are seen at London in recently signed Anglo-French and other trade treaties, says the Christian Science Monitor's correspondent in London. And he goes on to explain: These treaties are bastions in an amazingly complicated series of defensive trade walls that are being built up around Britain. The walls are in four distinguishable lines. The innermost and lowest wall was erected in February, 1932, when Britain left its traditional policy of free trade and resorted to tariffs. It is to protect United Kingdom farmers and manufacturers against "dumping" from abroad. The next wall is somewhat higher. It was an outcome of the British Empire Conference at Ottawa in July, 1932. It gives in Britain to British overseas Empire products advantages second only to those retained for goods produced at home.

SPECIAL MEASURES

The wall of which the Anglo-French pact forms part is yet higher. It applies to the goods of those foreign states that have entered into special agreements with Britain. These agreements provide for such mutual advantages on both sides as have proved feasible without infringing those reserved by Britain for home and Empire producers. The fourth wall is still more lofty. It includes the special tariff imposed on July 4, 1932, by Britain for purposes of debt collection, against the Irish Free State. It also covers the clearing house and other arrangements approved by the British Parliament in June, 1934, for use against Germany. The British system as a whole comprises not only tariffs but also "quotas," that is, quantitative limitation of imports. The "quotas" are being used chiefly in the interests of British farmers. They are designed to raise home prices of such agricultural products as bacon and butter. There are also British state subsidies of various kinds, as, for example, for home-produced wheat and sugar.

BACK TO BARTER

The pacts with outside nations give to foreign goods strictly limited access—preferably in British ships—to the British market. In exchange, Britain has bargained for similar access to foreign markets. The Anglo-French pact admits French silks to Britain on easy terms. British coal and other goods enjoy increased sales in France. Direct exchange of British coal for certain classes of French timber is also provided for. An Anglo-Russian agreement conditions the amount of British purchases of Soviet goods by that of United Kingdom products bought by Russia. An object here aimed at has been to increase British exports to Russia to a level commensurate with that of United Kingdom imports of Soviet commodities. An Anglo-Danish pact provides for Britain to buy a guaranteed proportion of its foreign supplies of bacon, hams, eggs and fish from Denmark. In return, Denmark agrees to absorb increased quantities of such British goods as iron, steel and coal. An Anglo-Argentine pact adds to similar arrangements a provision to facilitate the transfer of payments in satisfaction of British monetary claims. Anglo-Swedish, Anglo-Norwegian, Anglo-German and Finnish agreements of an analogous kind are also in force. Ones with Poland and Holland are pending.

banished by seeing that he passes a certain standard of driving ability. Temperaments and manners are not easily controlled by Government regulation—a fact which has often been illustrated in this Colony. Tests of fitness have a useful part to play in regard to motor-driving, but there is no one all-sufficient remedy for the menace of road casualties. The remedy has to be sought along several parallel lines. In the last resort, the psychological aspect of the problem will always be more intractable than the merely physical.

SHIFTING SAND OF EUROPE'S POLITICS

FOR a moment—perhaps for more than a moment—the Disarmament Conference shrank into something of secondary importance in the eyes of European diplomatists. The pursuit of peace along that road, while other roads lay unexplored, seemed to be leading into a blind alley; and the noise of the next war, for those who listen in to the future, seemed to be growing louder and more terrifying. The Disarmament Conference was breaking itself upon the demands of Germany for rearmament and France for security—or, broadly speaking, on the recurrent, incompatible claims of those who lost something by the peace treaties of 1919, and hope to regain it, and those who gained something by the same treaties, and are intent on holding it. For 15 years those incompatibilities have governed the history of Europe, determining its negotiations, its conferences, its armaments and even its economics. Redress, security—security, redress; such has been the dingo-dong behind the European controversy since the war. Disarmament after long delays and dawned upon the scene as a means of diminishing if not preventing the force of the clash. It now gives place again to security, and to a new scheme devised by France to promote it: Make war too dangerous to be tried—then perhaps we shall be secure, and disarmament may follow. That is the implication of the French proposals for an "Eastern Locarno."

Nine years have passed since three peace-loving statesmen—Stresemann, Briand and Sir Austen Chamberlain—devised the Treaty of Locarno. It appeared to provide a solution of France's repeated demand for security. Again and again she had asked that Britain should give her a guarantee of assistance against Germany. It was a commitment which Britain was unwilling to undertake. But substitute for this one-sided alignment of defence a triangular balance of forces—Britain guaranteeing France against aggression from Germany, and Germany against aggression from France, and so on, each guarantor acting through the League and in accordance with the decision of the League—that avoided all the danger of an alliance, and constituted a limited regional commitment to put force at the disposal of the League of Nations if peace were violated. That pact was made, and stands. It was a regional contribution toward the idea of the collective guarantee of peace.

But that is not enough for France. France to-day is more afraid of National Socialist Germany than she was nine years ago of a Germany for which Herr Stresemann was the spokesman. She has been looking once again to old allies in central Europe, to Poland and the Little Entente powers, Czechoslovakia, Roumania and Yugoslavia, all of which hold their present status by virtue of the peace treaties. France has turned also to a still more powerful state which has been brought nearer to her by reason of new fears, namely, Russia, the Russia which dreads Japan and desires security in Europe in case she should become involved in the Far East.

It may or may not have been the case that the late M. Louis Barthou's dramatic visits to central and eastern European capitals originally had for their aim the strengthening of old alliances and the introduction of Russia as a new force on the side of France. But whatever his original intention may have been, the French Foreign Minister devised a far happier plan for guaranteeing peace in central Europe, a plan which claimed to be based on the reciprocal method of Locarno.

Germany naturally viewed with alarm the first flamboyant speeches made by M. Barthou. She saw herself centrally situated in Europe with France and Belgium on one side, potentially hostile; Czechoslovakia on the south, Poland and the Baltic States on the east, and behind them all Russia; a ring of force encircling her on all sides. And her fears were shared by Hungary, whose ministers saw the threatening vision of the three powers of the Little Entente, allies of France, drawing their circle around her.

Germany isolated—Hungary isolated—that was the cry that went up in Berlin. And Britain, profoundly distrustful as she is of the Hitler methods of government, saw the danger: "We cannot consent to give any continuance to a policy for isolating and encircling Germany."

M. Barthou thereupon hurried from Paris to London. That, he explained, was not his intention. His policy, on the contrary, was one for the mutual provision of guarantees against war, and it was of the essence of the scheme that Germany itself was to be a partner in it. He had in mind—an "Eastern Locarno" for Germany, the Baltic States, Poland and Czechoslovakia, consisting of all-round mutual guarantees to give assistance against an aggressor. To this was added a further proposal that Russia should guarantee Germany against aggression from Germany, while France should offer the same guarantees to Germany and Russia. Russia, and no doubt also Germany, would in this case be expected to join the League of Nations, and that institution would provide the machinery by which the whole balance of guarantees would operate.

So apparently fair, so all-round, so promising a scheme for regional agreements to secure peace was one which Britain could not but encourage. Sir John Simon welcomed the scheme at once. It was welcomed by all parties in the House of Commons. And with a united Parliament behind him the British Foreign Minister had no hesitation in offering to use his good offices to persuade Germany to look favourably on the plan.

Supposing all these countries should approve, supposing all should sign the pact, would it not provide in the East and in the West of Europe something approaching that ideal of the collective guarantee of peace which has been so long desired? No doubt, this means guarantees of force. But how else could peace be insured? Would it not make possible a new beginning for the pursuit of disarmament, resting upon the equality of Germany and the removal of France's fears?

Great Britain was surely right in favouring M. Barthou's proposals. She accepted no new commitments herself, and her approval was dependent on the condition that Germany should be willing to

NOW YOU TELL ONE, BETTY!

By Eddie "do Mille" Kelly

IF you had listened hard enough on Thursday night while Betty Compton was broadcasting from ZBW you would have heard a slight commotion. It was only a trying to get in to tell our Great and Admiring Public about our talkie career. That there was champagne and cocktails there has nothing to do with it.

PERHAPS it is because our beauty is fading a little that these people seem to forget that we were once a Mae West. One has to resign oneself to that sort of thing and be content with memories.

That's all we have now. Our memories and our press clippings.

And yet, when we come to think of it, we were lucky to get out of Hollywood when we did. A vast concourse of film fans were down at the boat to see us off, but the police rescued us somehow.

Thank heavens, we are finished now with the tinsel and glitter. Soon we shall be going back to our father, the Earl. Back to the old family castle at Laichikok. A kindly word from Franks, the old retainer. The joyous welcome from Snip, Rover, Fido, Carlo and the rest of our favourite horses—how we look forward to it all!

And yet, shall we miss the old life? Shall we miss the fierce lights of the Kleigs? Yes, it seems that we shall.

It seems but yesterday since we were cast out by the casting director. As we think of it, we can still feel the thrill we experienced when we first sang "Mother, Get the Filz, There's a Fly on Father's Philz," the Theme Song of "20,000 Years on the Peak."

Even the directors broke down. Hard-bitten men, who had been right through the war or who had married, sobbed like little children. When the last note died away they came to us in a body whimpering and asked us never to do it again. It was shortly after this that we were starred in "The Silent Voice."

We often laugh cynically as we glance back over our press notices. We will give you a few extracts: "The best part of 'The Spot Marked XXX' was undoubtedly in the second reel, when Kelly was murdered. If we might say so, the succeeding attempts to trace the murderer were half-hearted." "All I can say is, 'My God, what a film!'"

"Kelly gave a powerful impersonation of the silent voice in 'The Silent Voice'. There should be more talkies like this."

"The stamper to the Bar in 'The Face on a Bar-room Floor' was realistic. Kelly's struggle to reach the Bar was vividly real."

We could go on for hours. And then we ask ourselves, why should we go on for hours? And we wait vainly for an answer.

"What awaits one in Hollywood?" we have frequently been asked.

"Naught but disillusionment," we have replied, burying our head in our hands.

When we were ghosting for Mae West we suffered such emotional stress, that frequently we had to leave the set. We were shot four times in one scene. They said it was temperamental, but we knew it was their rotten run.

Our best role was when we were ghosted for the Invisible Man. We got a lot of fun out of that. For instance, Mae West once approached us when we were doing this particular bit of ghost work.

"Why don't you come up and see me sometime?" she whispered.

"Too late, Mae," we replied, "we've been up three times already."

Still, we suppose success like this is not given to all of us, but don't you girls get downhearted.

Don't be disappointed if you fail to become a talkie star immediately.

Get married!

Easy Pickings.

Hon. Frank D. Abell:

Dear Senator:

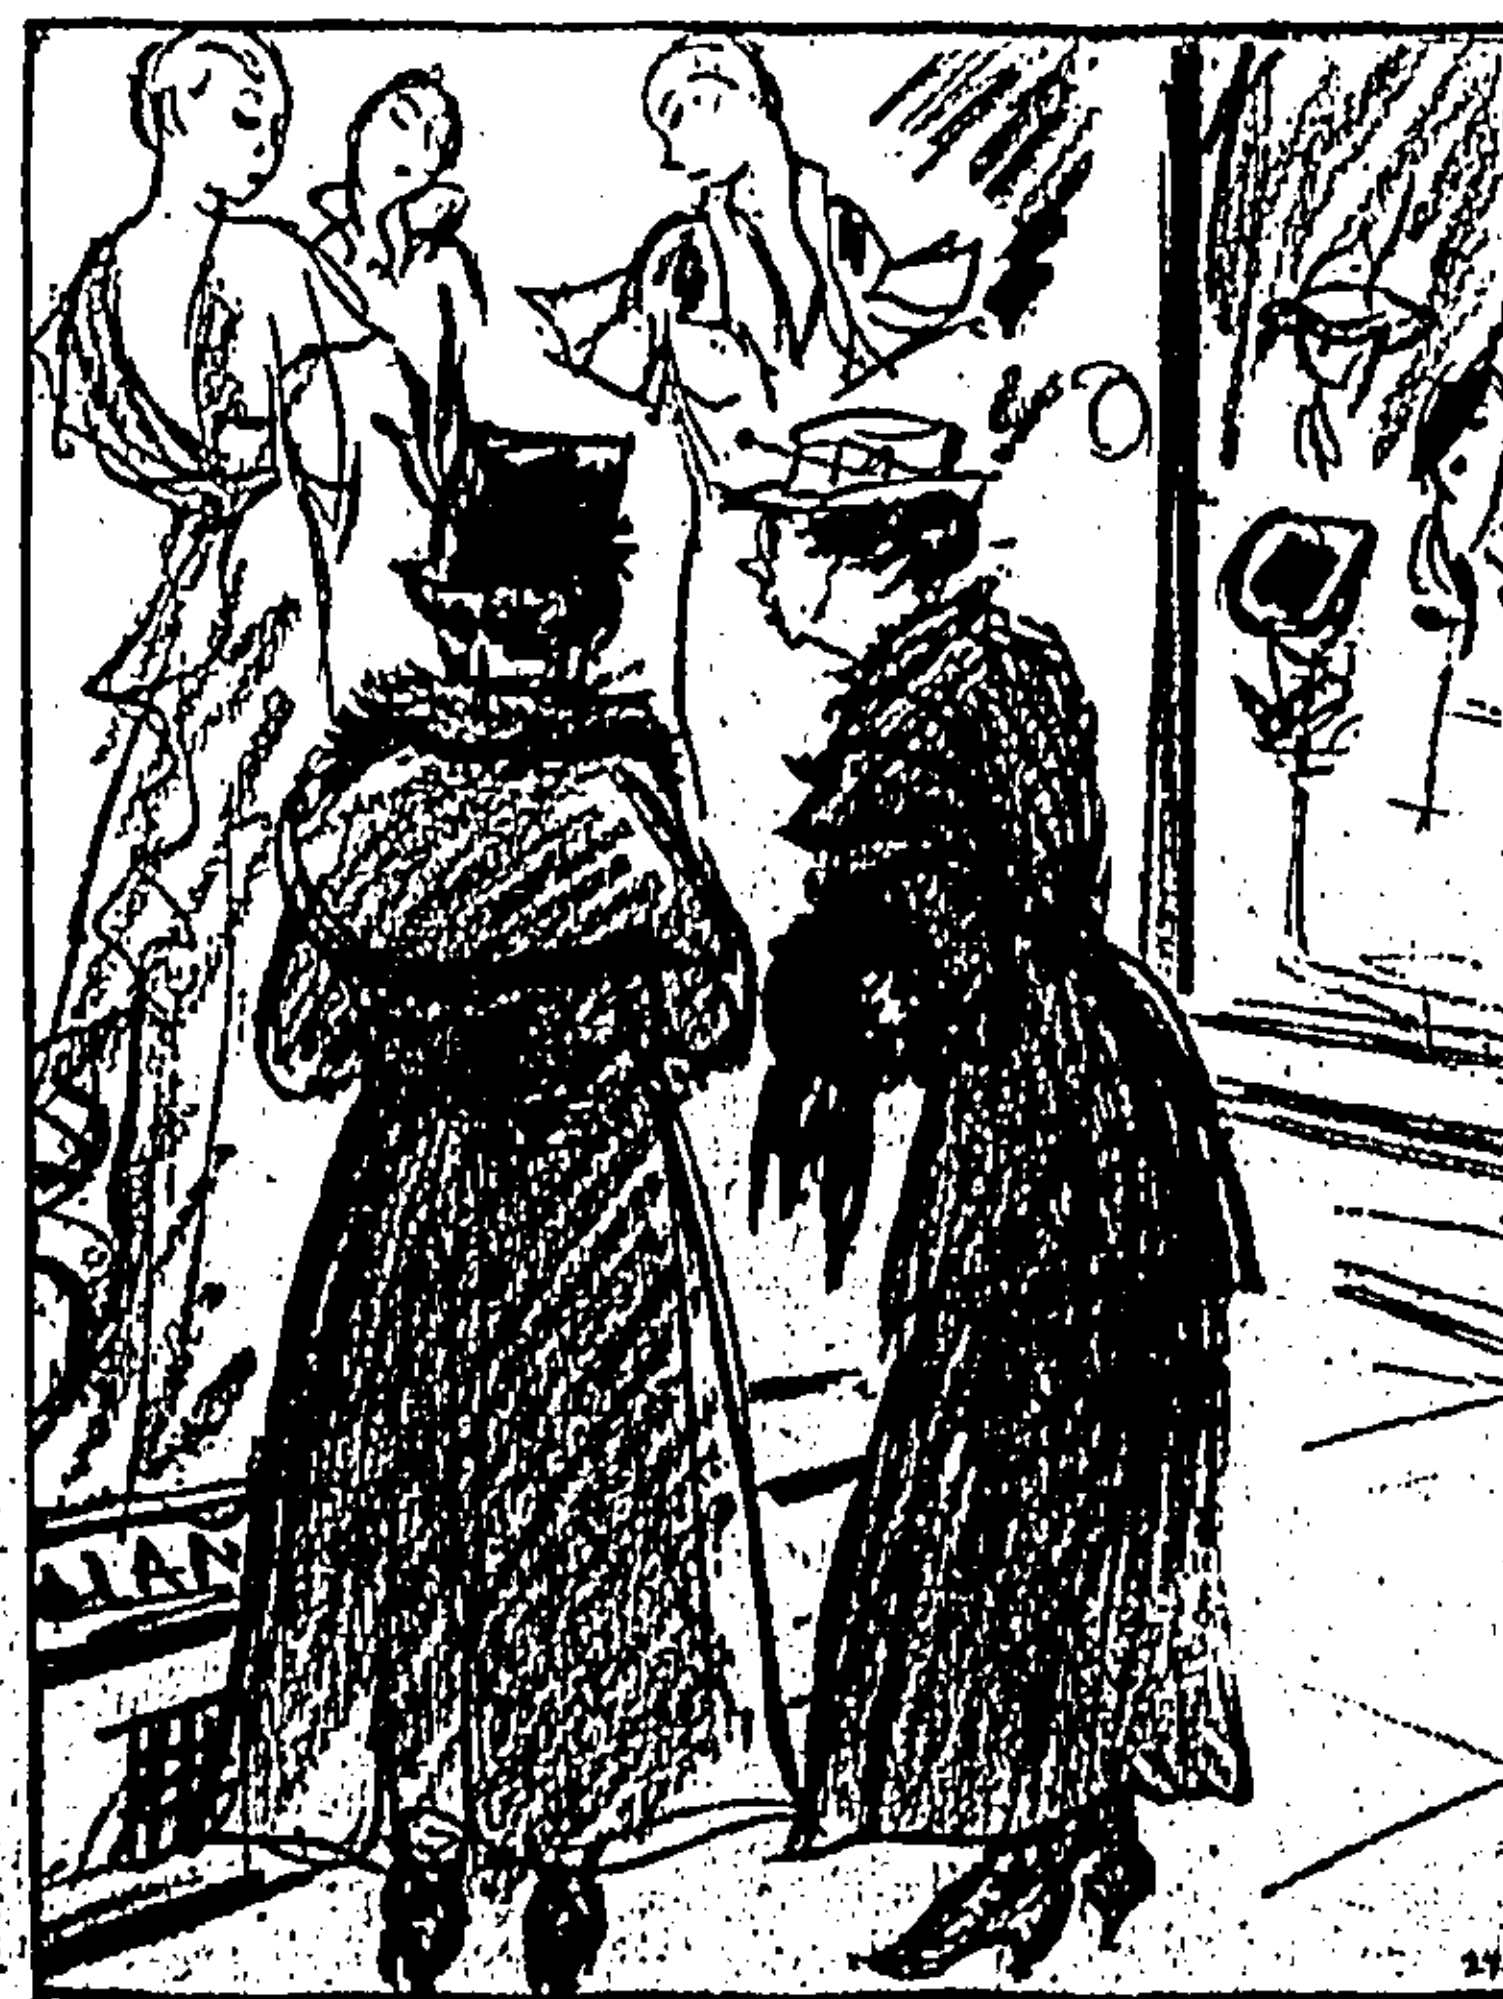

I am interested in your investigation of the Port of New York Authority.

It has been noised about town for a long time that "pickings" on the bridge was great.

From my observations a man cannot work for $30 per week and enjoy the following luxuries: Pay board, buy a new automobile, frequent cabarets and speakies, entertain ladies, pay for the upkeep of a car, neither can he afford to go to a speakeasy put a $100 bill down on the bar and stay until the $100 is licked up.

Trusting that this information will be of some value to you,

(sgd.) Herbert A.

WAR VETERANS GATHER

(Special to "Telegraph")

Miami, Fla., Oct. 21.
The convention of the American Legion of war veterans opens here on Monday.

It is expected that Mr. Frank Belgrano, San Francisco banker, will be elected Commander.

Some anticipate interesting reactions to the policies of President Roosevelt, recently explained in his speech at Roanoke.—United Press.

POPULAR CAMERA

HANDY LITTLE ROLLEICORD

One of the most popular cameras at the present time is the Rolleicord twin-lens roll-film reflex, made by the well-known firm of Franke and Heidecke, of Brunswick, Germany.

This excellent little camera is modelled on the famous Rolleiflex, with certain simplifications, so that it can be sold at a much lower price, viz., one which brings it within the purchasing power of a new and larger class of users who have looked with envy on the possessors of the Rolleiflex. Although the Rolleicord has not automatic wind of the film nor one or two other features of the Rolleiflex, it is, nevertheless, a first-rate little instrument of most attractive design and efficient performance.

The taking lens is an f/4.5 Tessar of 3-inches focus, giving excellent definition over the 2½ x 2½ ins. film. The finder-lens is a Helioscope, giving a very bright image on the focusing screen. Focusing is done by a milled disc on the right-hand side of the camera, which is also fitted with a focusing scale showing distances up to 0.8 metre (less than 3 ft.). The hood of the upper "camera" erects itself on being released, and is fitted with a magnifier which is brought into operation simply by lifting up a spring-held plate (carrying the magnifier) on the back of the hood, and turning it over the top of the hood where it engages by a catch. The magnifier can be put into position in a second. The front of the hood can also be turned back to serve as a direct-vision finder when using the camera at the eye level. This convenient and efficient design of the hood is on a par with that of other parts of the camera.

The Compur shutter, for example, is arranged so that the one lever serves for both setting and releasing it. When holding the camera, you press the lever to the right to set it, and to the left to release it. The shutter gives exposures up to 1/300th sec. in addition to bulb and time, and carries the iris diaphragm of the lens, which can be closed down as far as f/32. The single release of a metal cap unlocks the cover of the back of the camera, disclosing the film chambers. Of these the upper one, carrying the take-up spool, is fitted with a little rod and milled disc which actuates an exposure counter placed on the left-hand side of the camera and arranged so that the numbers 1, 2, 3, and so on, up to 12 successively come into view as the film is wound on after each exposure. When No. 12 shows, one pushes a little catch-button, and the film indicator then automatically returns to No. 1.

The design of the camera allows of the two lenses being placed with the minimum of separation, so that effect due to difference of viewpoint is reduced to the minimum. Such effect is always a minor matter, except when taking subjects at very close quarters, and in regard to these the makers have provided compensation, so that the amount of subject actually obtained on the film is actually obtained on the film. With these many excellent features the Rolleicord should have no difficulty in making innumerable friends for itself on account of its very moderate price and the low cost of film, 12 exposures being obtained on the popular 8-exposure 3½ x 2½ films. The camera can be obtained in a leather case of a special design, which allows of the case remaining attached to the camera when the latter is in use.

The Christmas parcel mail for Great Britain will be closed at the General Post Office at noon on November 9, and is due in London on December 10. The public are requested to post early.

POLO CUP FINAL

Royal Artillery Qualify Against Borderers.

On Friday last the Royal Artillery beat the 24th Regiment (South Wales Borderers) by five goals to three, and thereby entered the final of the R.O.Y.L.I. Cup Tournament. They will meet the Civilian at Causeway Bay this afternoon, the match commencing at 5 p.m.

The teams on Friday were:
ROYAL ARTILLERY 24th REGIMENT.
G. H. P. Morgan, Capt. P. V. Williams, Major Brennan, No. 3, Jordan, S. E. Skye, No. 2 A. J. Stocker, N. W. Metcalfe, No. 1 C. P. Blackden.

The Gunners were unfortunate in having their captain, Capt. P. V. Williams, away, and on previous form it seemed likely that the 24th Regiment would win. The Gunners, however, played a magnificent game and the 24th were rather off form. Nevertheless on the day's play undoubtedly the better team won.

Portman was the life and soul of the Royal Artillery team. His defence was sound and he was instrumental in scoring most of their goals, which occurred chiefly in the second and third chukkas where the Gunners had the better of the game. Brennan was hitting well and the forwards, Skye and Metcalfe, played a useful game.

The 24th Regiment never seemed properly to get going. They pressed hard in the first and fourth chukkas, but the backs were not hitting the ball up as well as they usually do and the forwards were apt to be too far up. Yates, Blackden and Stocker each scored one goal, while Jordan was responsible for most of their attacking movements.

SHANGHAI GOLF.

Marine Wins Amateur Championship.

Shanghai, Oct. 21.
The amateur golf championship, played here to-day, was won by J. B. Broadus, a corporal in the United States Marines. He won by seven holes, his aggregate being 290.

P. D. Hunter, accountant in Butterfield and Swire's was second with an aggregate of 297.

Broadus did the four rounds in 70, 67, 75 and 78, 290.

The first 39 holes were played at Seokjingjiao and the second 36 at Hungjiao.

Hunter was one up at the end of the morning's play but fell away in the afternoon. Broadus's second round of 67 sets a new course record.

BILLIARDS TITLE.

Joe Davis Secures A Thousand Lead.

Melbourne, Oct. 20.
At the close of to-day's play in the final of the World's Billiards Championship between Walter Lindrum (holder) and Joe Davis of England, the latter was leading by 12,111 points to 11,097.

Davis gave his finest all-round display since he arrived in Australia, when he compiled a break of 824. He also scored 206 and 441.

Lindrum carried his unfinished break of 216 of the previous day to 501, while he also compiled breaks of 518, 639 and 100 unfinished.

SOUTH CHINA RETAIN THEIR 100 PER CENT RECORD

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN FORWARD LINE

Fulfill Nearly All Demands Of Match Winning Game

NAVY NOT FREQUENTLY IMPRESSIVE

(By "Veritas").

Faster and cleverer in every phase of the game, South China first string yesterday piled on four goals against the Navy without reply and thus retained their 100 per cent. record at the same time challenging the "B" team for the leadership.

With the exception of Wong Mee-shun, the Chinese were at full strength, but the Navy had several alterations, and were quite a different team to that which did service against St. Joseph's a week ago. They called on the assistance of several players from H.M.S. Eagle and the Adventure, and although they have promise of cutting down into a sound combination given sufficient practice, there was no gainsaying that yesterday they were vastly inferior to the Chinese.

The return of South China's Canton players made all the difference. Life was infused into the forward line, and once the attack had obtained the full measure of the Navy rearguard, they gave an artistic and thrilling display.

Fung King-cheung's leadership was reminiscent of that player at his best, which was roughly three years ago. He fed his wings with brilliant accuracy and skill, and in the later stages of the game treated the excited spectators to some fireworks shooting.

MOST IMPRESSIVE FEATURE.

The most impressive feature of the Chinese, in fact, was the real improvement noted among the forwards. The rest of team played as usual—first rate. The defence was a solid as the Bank of England, and the half backs so firm that the efforts of the Navy forwards to break through reminded one of a sea dashing against breakwaters.

The work of Wong Wing, Li Ting-sang and Lau Mau was never more effective for its quietness and efficiency. Li Ting-sang was a tower of strength and at no time were he and his colleagues in danger.

Leung Wing-chui, taking over his favourite position at centre-half, played his best game for many moons. His big, and only fault, was a continual technical breach of the rules in headwork, when, in an enthusiasm to beat the man for the ball, he allowed his elbows to flay, and his shoulders to dig in his opponent's back.

Leung should set out to restrain himself, for any advantage he obtains from securing the ball from these wild leaps, is nullified by the foul. This applies, in a lesser degree, to Li Kwok-wai, and in greater degree to Tay Qua-long.

Tay continues to indulge in that foolish practice of jumping at the man. It is dangerous, unnecessary and an insult to his own footballing ability. When will some kind authority take him quietly aside and point this out to him?

NOTHING BUT ADMIRATION!
Beyond this I have nothing but admiration for the splendid football served up by South China yesterday. They fulfilled pretty nearly all the demands of a match-winning game. The ball was moved quickly and accurately from player to player. Although the first half revealed a tendency to persist in fancy work at the expense of shooting when in front of goal, the closing chapters saw the forwards seizing every opportunity to test Pepper, and three goals in the second half is sufficient testimony to the benefit of such tactics.

In Pak-wah was a definite success at inside left, although it is probable that this versatile player could play anywhere in the attack with the same amount of achievement. Ho Fung and Tam Kong-pak were as full of constructive ideas as a refrigerator of cold air.

Tam was especially unselfish, and in addition to keeping "Too Kwai-shing" busy with ideal "through" passes, scored a glorious goal with his head. The whole art of Tam's headwork (incomparable in local football) is his uncanny anticipation, which allows him to beat a much taller player for the ball. He is also blessed with the knack of twisting his neck, at the right moment to obtain direction from well high impossible angles.

TIRELESS WORKERS.

That the Navy were without doubt four goals inferior to the Chinese indicates that as a team they were not frightfully impressive. But it has also to be taken into account that as a team they have not played together before this season.

One and all were tireless workers. Pepper kept a fine goal, and seeing they were up against the best forward line in South China, Forrest and Solomon did none so bad in defence. Not until the second goal had been registered did they begin to break up.

Solomon accomplished a lot of excellent work, and I liked his speedy interceptions and headwork. If he and Forrest had been as skilled as their opposite numbers in the art of covering South China might never have scored.

The same confidence could not be placed in the half back line, where only McQuire shone. This centre-half is undoubtedly a fine player. He knows most of the tricks, but lacks the necessary polish successfully to complete his efforts. There were several times when he spilt prize-worthy defensive achievements with poor passing. Neither Love nor Pyatt were up to standard good enough to outwit the opposing wingers, although Love made two Kwai-shing go all out to gain any ground.

O'Donnell and Shewbrook, constituting the left wing, were the best of the Navy attack. They indulged in some promising movements, but so often overran the ball. Nevertheless they had ambitions to play the Chinese at their own game, and against less efficient players than Li and Leung in-chai, might have met with a considerable measure of success.

SMITH'S MISTAKE.

Smith again made the mistake of playing fourth half back instead of remaining up the field to keep the attack intact. It is strange to understand why he does this, for he has about the best shot of any of the forwards, and is the most likely to score when opportunity occurs.

Robinson was rather weak on the right wing, and Strong failed to live up to his name as leader of the attack, being completely overawed by Li and Lau Mau.

Past exchanges were sustained throughout the game. The Chinese developed their attacks more powerfully and were doubly as dangerous as the Navy in front of goal. Albert it was not until the first half was well advanced that Ip Pak-wah secured with the Navy's defence all out of position, and raced through to beat Pepper with a fast rising, right-footed drive.

In the second half, the Chinese were absolutely dominant, and after some strong rallies in the opening minutes, added two goals in two minutes. Tam scored, a beauty with his head and Fung King-cheung netted with a peachy drive. A little later Ip Pak-wah secured his second and South China's fourth and final goal, although the home team were swarming round the Navy citadel in the dying moments of the game.

CAER CLARK CUP SEASON OPENS

C.B.A.'S BIG WIN

In the first game of the Caer Clark Cup competition played at King's Park on Saturday the Central British Association trounced the C.B.S. to the tune of ten goals to one.

E. Woolley was principal goal getter scoring eight of the ten goals for her side. A. Reavis and M. Smith were responsible for the other two goals. H. Knill netted the only goal for the Schoolgirls, from a penalty Bully against F. K.

GAMBLE GIVES LIE DIRECT

PLAYS ONE OF BEST GAMES IN LOCAL FOOTBALL

LINCOLNS LACK UNITY

HOWE'S three goals on Saturday at the expense of the Lincolns, put the Club up to second place in the league table for 24 hours, after which they were displaced by South China, who netted four times against the Navy, and now boast the best goal average in the division.

THE Club were value for their points, but hardly to the extent of three clear goals. Glaring errors on the part of the soldier's vanguard quintette were chiefly instrumental in the Club leaving the field with their citadel intact. On the other hand, full credit must be given to Rodger, Gamble and Strange for their sturdy defending.

GAMBLE gave the lie direct to the critics by playing one of his best games in local football. He was splendidly stubborn and kicked a fine length.

ALL round there was nothing much wrong with the Club. They played according to the demands of the occasion, which were not so great as if they had been opposed by South China or the Borderers. The forwards were lively, but had not their movements under control all the time. Baldwin was neat and efficient on the left wing, and Ernest Strange indulged in his favourite perigrinations, sometimes with conspicuous success, and at other times. . . . Nevertheless his very presence in the attack lent it vim and purpose.

HOWE'S best work was in the scoring of three goals, and you can't say much more than that! On the other hand he did not send one into raptures with his mid-field and approach work. It was methodical, but apt to be slow. But Albert has no cause to get worried over this criticism. After all he scored three goals.

THE Lincolns lacked unity, and this in addition to many faults in shooting. There were some outstanding individuals, such as Ridley, Ash, Dudley and Higgins, but four or five players don't make a team, and absence of co-operation and co-ordination among the rest of the players contributed largely to the defeat.

THE crying need with them is an organised plan of attack. Too many ideas, of a contrasting nature, are allowed to be flouted at the same time, and the result is generally chaos. Some attention to this factor might well repay the soldiers, who certainly boast some fine players.

SOMETIMES football teams seize the opportunity to have a good laugh on the critics, and Kowloon certainly did theirs on Saturday, when, against all earlier form they beat the East Lancashire by the odd goal in three.

IT was an entirely different team which delighted supporters of the Railway Ground Club. Gone was the haphazard and desultory movements of the previous weeks. The attack, well led by G. White, created a new impression. There was cohesion and intelligence in their constructive approach play. White capped a great afternoon's work by scoring twice, but he was always ably supported by Elliott, and the Knox brothers on opposite wings.

THE defence played with more determination than hitherto, and refused to yield an inch to the sprightly, but rather inconclusive movements of the East Lancashire forwards. Enauman and Everest were outstanding, and Bliss a hard worker.

RECREIO LADIES WIN.

The Y.M.C.A. men's "A" team defeated H.M.S. Verity by seven goals to nil.

CLUB OPEN SEASON WITH TWO WINS

AGAINST NAVY

The Club opened their season on Saturday with two victories, on their own ground their first fifteen defeating the Navy by 16 points (two goals and two tries) to 13 points (two goals and one try), and the "A" beating another Naval side by 11 points (a goal and two tries) to three points (a try).

The first team game was fast and mainly featured by the splendid work of the Club pack, and the excellent tackling and kicking by the Navy.

The Navy opened with a try by Sowden, Mecke equalising a few minutes later with an unconverted try. During the second half Franks gave the Navy the lead again with a try which Suther converted. Bramble was next over for the Club, a try which Peers failed to convert. Walkden then gave the club the lead and Robertson added the extras. Before time Warren scored another three points for the Navy, while Suther majorised and Ferguson scored the winning try for the Club in the last minute of the game for Robertson to convert.

The Club scored 177 runs, with J. Stein making a fine 47 not out and C. W. Bishop 45. P. B. Tata took six wickets for 64 runs. The University replied with 81 runs, for four wickets, when stumps were drawn. K. L. Ng made 22 not out.

ARSENAL VICTORY OVER SPURS

MAINTAIN LEAD AT HEAD OF FIRST DIVISION

IRELAND BEATS SCOTLAND

The overwhelming victory of the Arsenal over Tottenham Hotspur at Highbury on Saturday has enabled the champions to maintain their lead in the First Division, by a single point. Stoke are their nearest rivals now.

A crowd of over 35,000 spectators visited Windsor Park, Belfast on Saturday to see the defeat of Scotland at the hands of Ireland in their international fixture, by two goals to one.

The victory was greeted with the wildest enthusiasm. Last year Ireland returned the same score against Scotland.

Hugh Callaghan (Chelsea) opened the scoring for Scotland five minutes before the interval. D. Martin (Belfast Celtic) equalised from a melee ten minutes from the end and J. Coulter also of Belfast Celtic, gave them victory in the last minute of the game.

BEACH CLUB GIRL

By MABEL McELLIOTT

CHAPTER XXXVI

Boots faced Edward soberly across the small table. In corner, screened behind flowering shrubs in green tubs, a string orchestra softly played. "I don't honestly know," she confessed. "I don't know what to say." Russ had been dead for eight months now. Whenever she thought of him it was with a little tug of pain at her heartstrings. She knew now that what she had felt for Russ was merely attraction. If he had lived their life together would have been a mockery. Just the same, she was not ready to be Edward's wife. It wasn't right. Russ's wife, that Russ, with his big smile and his cheerful swagger, should be so soon forgotten.

"We could slip away and be married very quietly, you see," Edward was saying ingratiatingly. "No publicity." She made a little movement of dissent. "You're rushing me so," she complained. "I only said I would consider it."

"You like me, don't you?" Edward stared at her rather discontentedly. "Of course I do. But that's not enough."

"Nonsense," said Edward triumphantly and with the air of settling the discussion. The thought flashed into Boots' mind that marriage with Edward would square up old scores with Sylvia and Patty and all the girls who had hurt her during that last summer in Larchmont. Oh, but did all that matter? When she married it must be for love and love alone, not because her ring would make Sylvia Rivers open her eyes more widely.

Ah, but what Edward didn't understand was that liking wasn't enough to justify marriage. She had rushed pell mell into marriage before, considering, like a child playing a new game. Her lesson had been brief and bitter. Edward had everything to recommend him, she reminded herself. Looks, money, family, position. He had an equable disposition. His big laugh rang out heartily on every occasion. What matter then if his pulses did not race at his approach? It was madness to expect that racing of the pulses. Denis who stirred this response in her belonged to someone else.

As though divining her thoughts, Edward said carelessly, "Saw Kay and Denis last night? Was he thin and fine drawn, silent and aloof? Was he mooring and cruel? Did he speak of me?"

"Aloud who said, 'She's very good looking.'"

Edward ate caviar with relish, nodding. "Paris Interlude."

CINEMA NEWS
NOTES FROM THE THEATRES

Versatility—the ability to play any type of screen role handed to her—in the secret of Myrna Loy's steady climb to the top of the film ladder of success. Miss Loy makes her first appearance as a full-fledged star in "Stamboul Quest," now at the Queen's Theatre. "I took me several years to escape from the web of movie 'types,' the new star stated recently. For several years, Miss Loy could obtain none but exotic, campy roles. She was 'typed' as a siren of the screen and no director or producer could play 'straight' characters. And now, in less than a year, she has proved that she can be as versatile as any other actress in pictures. In "Stamboul Quest" Miss Loy for the first time enacts the character of a spy—but love eventually makes her never to fall in love. Produced by Bernard Hyman, and directed by Sam Wood, the cast of the new picture includes George Brent, G. Henry Goddard, Lionel Atwill and Judith Vosselli.

"Hold That Girl!"
Claire Trevor so liked the wardrobe designed by Royer for her role in the Fox film production, "Hold That Girl!" that the studio presented it to her as a gift. An interesting outfit is a little coat and dress combination. The smart coat is swagger length, of rough tweed in a grey and green mixture. The coat has a Johnny collar (loose, jaunty, standing up in back without lapels); the sleeves are cut quite full small turnback cuffs. Under the coat is a grey Botany flannel waistcoat buttoned down the centre with grey covered buttons and buttons bound in grey suede. The belt that holds the waistcoat in place is of green suede with a silver buckle. The waistcoat is cut with small points in front and short peplins over the hips. The skirt of a grey-green tweed mixture, is combined with a blouse of pale grey crepe tie that matches the green suede of the belt. A green crepe Ascot tie is worn around the throat when the coat is closed, to give a more completely smart effect. While the suit answers the need for a hot trip or for motor-ing, it also has a definite service in being feminine as well as sporty and dashing in appearance. To complete the ensemble, Miss Trevor wears a green suede hat, with a small brim turned up on one side, green suede shoes and "bag" and grey gloves. "Hold That Girl!" in which plays the ding. He liked good food, good wines. He always had the best table at restaurant or night club. He had singular taste at the lights, also. If she married Edward she wouldn't have to worry about bills. She would have supply furs to wrap around her, sleek chiffons and silks, fine lace. "What's on your mind, loveliness?" She smiled at him. Will Denis and Kay be married soon, do you think?

"Don't know. They said so last summer. Probably they'll just run down to City Hall some morning and do it without fuss. Let them be married, it and be over with it. Boots cried within herself, that icy hand squeezing her heart. Let them marry and send out cards and have a penthouse and a cook and books and beds and the rest of it. Then I'll get out of my mind forever. I'll get on by thinking of another woman's husband."

Kay as a young wife, dark, glowing, beautiful; Denis bending over her, proud, disdainful of all others. No, no, she couldn't buy it! She would be going back and forth to the Bay Tree every day and some day she would meet Denis on the street. Oh, better to be dead and buried than to meet Denis then!

"We'd go abroad after we married," Edward was saying fatuously. "You've never been, little thing, have you? We'd go to Paris and London and Vienna and Budapest."

She listened to him idly, as in a dream. She promised nothing but her eyes smiled vaguely and he accepted this as half a promise.

Later, in the shop, Frances Gawtry said to her, "He's really a very nice lad. I think you're a lucky girl." Someone else had said that—was it? One of the girls at Lacy's. But Frances was different. She was more worldly, more assured and she, too, thought Edward splendid.

Inensibly Boots was affected by these various pronouncements. She was kinder to Edward, gentler with him, sweeter, so that he came to adopt a completely possessive air with her. As for Denis, when her year of mourning for Russ was almost up she had met his people, been tacitly approved by them. The web-tightened around her.

One warm, rainy October morning she was alone in the shop when a slim, middle-aged woman in a bright raincoat walked in. She was disheartened against the light and Boots came forward with the polite, mechanical smile reserved for customers. Her manner changed abruptly. She rushed into the other woman's arms. "Why, mother!" They were laughing and crying all together. Mrs. Raeburn's thin face worked spasmodically. She had to take off her rimless glasses to wipe away the bright drops, she said. "I—had to come," she said. "I—had to come where you were—just the other day. My dear little girl! We thought you were down

"Paris Interlude."
Paris, its American colony, gay goings-on, romance and drama are mixed in a unique blend of entertainment in "Paris Interlude," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's hit "All Good Americans," in which Hope Williams scored one of her finest hits. In the screen version which comes on Thursday to the Queen's Theatre the actress plays the popular Madge Evans, the American girl who took the man she met too seriously. Also prominently cast are Otto Kruger, Robert Young, Una Merkel, Ted Healy, Louise Henry, Edward Brophy, George McFarlane, Bert Roach and Richard Tucker. The plot deals with an American girl, tourist, who is stranded in Paris. The news correspondent two proposed to her. He is a writer, and she works her way to fame as a fashion model. When her philanthropic lover returns she finds that she has a loyal friend who is a thriller, comedy, a spectacular masquerade of the art colony at the Latin Quarter, a glamorous fashion show in a great highlights and other detail. "Catherine the Great."
Alexander Korda, the Hungarian film producer, whose latest success, "Catherine the Great," is at the King's Theatre to-day, was in his early manhood a newspaper reporter in Budapest. His interest turned to films, and he began directing in 1916 in Budapest. Later he went to Vienna, Rome, and then Berlin, where he made the first of his famous Ufa Company pictures for the famous Ufa Company. Korda went to Hollywood in 1920, joining the First National Film Company, where he made numerous pictures, including "The Stolen Bride." He later joined the Fox Production Company, before going back to First National for three years. One of his best known pictures for this company was the brilliant "Private Life of Helen of Troy," one of the biggest box office Hollywood successes. He was again with Fox in 1930, then left for Europe, and made several pictures for Paramount at the British picture was universally hailed as the best British picture made to date. In 1932 he started his own film company, London mouth and here you've been all this time!" The ice about Boots' heart melted. She had been steeling herself against this emotion, any emotion; but it seemed now she had been wrong. It was better to feel something, anything, rather than go on as she had been going, half-dead, half-alive. Frances came in, furling a dripping umbrella, and had to be introduced. She was properly interested and cordial. She had heard that if not all of Boots' story, Mrs. Raeburn must stay, Frances insisted, and Barbara could take the early lunch hour. It didn't make a scrap of difference.

So the two women murmured over a scrubbed deal table in the nearby tearoom. There was so much to be said—so much bitterness to be gilded over, so many things to explain. "I was and am," Boots said, her eyes filling at the memory, "but the letters came back unopened." "I know," Mrs. Raeburn shook her head. "Daddy wouldn't have it. He's softer now, dear. He says he never knew it all happened. He's been doing a lot of thinking since he's been in bed."

Mrs. Raeburn, it appeared, had had a light stroke. "He'll be up and about in two weeks but of course he'll have to go very slow. He'll have to be careful," his wife said. "Florida lives with us now all the time. It helps. I had to come to town to settle some business. I made up my mind I was going to find you."

Daddy's business, she explained, had been going down hill for some time. She didn't just know what their plans would be. He had some insurance maturing next month—not much but enough to keep them afloat for a while. Florida was a paying guest. "I can help," Boots offered youthfully. "I'm saving some money now. Frances and I have a tiny apartment together and we cook over a gas stove and live on nothing a week."

Mrs. Raeburn stiffened. Boots wasn't to think of it, she said. No, she and Daddy would manage; they always had. And she was doing some things for the Women's Club. "Eighteen dollars every day," Mrs. Raeburn rolled every day. "An eight-part-time maid. It was amazing how little the table cost if you shopped at the chain stores."

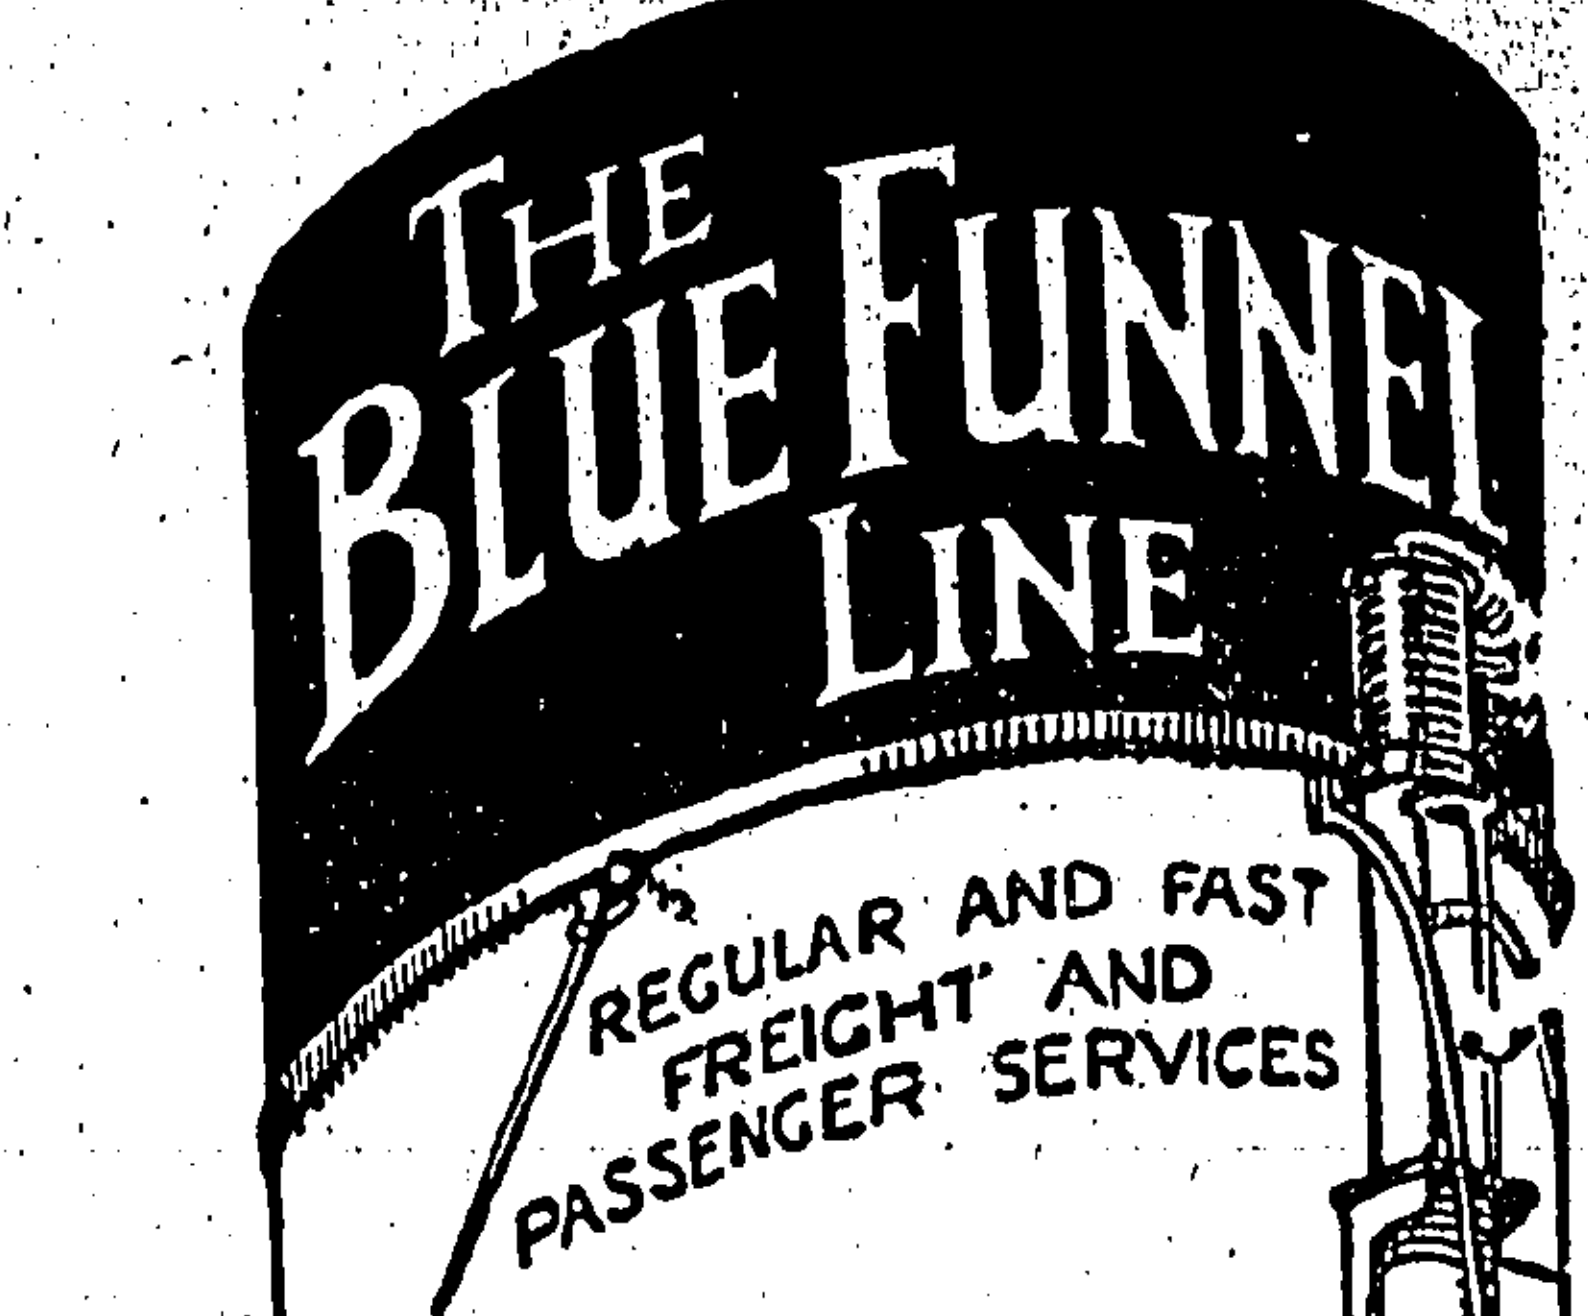

She clung to the girl on parting. She looked definitely older. The lines around her mouth had deepened their parentheses; her neck sagged. "Come out and see Daddy some week-end," she begged. "He wants to see you. He's dying to, but you know how stubborn he is."

Boots promised. She watched her mother walk away, slim and worn in her rainy day clothes and her heart ached. There was so much she ought to have to make her comfortable, to make life easier for her. If Boots were Edward's wife she could do all that!

Film Productions, and made that amusing satire on Mayfair marriages, "Welding Rehearsal." His production of "Catherine the Great" stars Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Elizabeth Bergner, the amazing German actress. The supporting cast includes Flora Robson, Sir Gerald du Maurier, Irene Vanbrugh, Griffith Jones, Dorothy Hale, and Diana Napier.

"Winner Take All!"
A motion picture star has to satisfy more than his director that he has enacted his part to perfection with all due realism. There is a watchful audience of millions of people ready to pick a characterization to pieces. James Cagney understands what the demand for realism means. In his latest Warner Bros. picture, "Winner Take All," which is playing at the Alhambra Theatre to-day, he plays the part of a prizefighter. When the camera caught him in the ring, his body was perfectly developed, without the slightest bit of surplus poundage, and his technique was realistic enough to satisfy the myriad of fight-fans who will see his picture. But it took weeks of preparation under the guiding hand of an experienced trainer—diet, exercise and boxing instruction, before Cagney was able to perfect in his characterization. When the picture was over, James Cagney had nothing to do with his new pugilistic ability, but he had the consolation of knowing that, in the future, would be combatants will think twice about picking a fight with him because, with his fine up, Jimmy now knows all the answers.

CHURCH SCHISM

EVANGELIST REVOLT AGAINST REICH

Berlin, Oct. 21. Conditions in the German Evangelical Church have reached a critical stage with the convocation of the opposition Synod.

Led by Bishop Koch, the opposition Synod has broken with Reich-bishop Muller's administration in a secession resolution which requests all congregations, their ministers, councillors and their administrators to refuse obedience to Hitler's plenipotentiary in Church affairs, Reichsbishop Muller, and to the Reich Church itself.

The opposition Synod, in a manifesto, requires obedience to it and to its organizations, and demands that the Reich Government should recognize the new situation and that, in all matters concerning the Church, the Church alone should have jurisdiction.

The secession resolution was read amidst intense devotional excitement by the venerable Opposition Bishop, Dr. Koch, in the 700-year old Parish Church at Saint Anne, a fashionable suburb of Dahlem.

Bitter Attack.

Bitterly attacking the followers of the Reichsbishop, Dr. Koch said that the admixture of politics and religion through the doctrine of "One State, One People and One Church" had annulled the gospel of the German Evangelical Church, thus handing the mission of the Church to forces in this world.

The grave step taken by the Confessional Church has completely widened the schism in Germany and entails serious complications which must be settled before Church life in Germany resumes its peaceful progress.

The adherents of the Confessional Church will cease to pay Church taxes until their Church is recognised by the State.

The next step rests with the Hitler Government. Bishop Koch, who for the time being will be head of the new Evangelical Church, is remaining in Berlin, awaiting the Government's next move.—Our Own Correspondent.

TRAFALGAR DAY

SIGNIFICANCE STRESSED BY LORD LLOYD

London, Oct. 21. "Conditions throughout the world to-day resemble the ominous weather conditions that prevailed on the morning of the Battle of Trafalgar on October 21, 1805," observed Lord Lloyd, President of the Navy League, in a Trafalgar Day message.

"The future security of the British Empire hangs precariously in the balance," he added. "We are no longer supreme on sea, land, or air, and upon our common will to uphold our strength at sea and conserve our unity depends the future of the Empire and the peace of the world."

Hongkong Celebration

In commemoration of Trafalgar Day, an impressive wreath laying ceremony took place at the Cenotaph on Saturday morning.

A token from H. E. the Governor, Sir William Peel, was laid by Capt. R. F. Walter, A.D.C.; a wreath from H. E. Admiral Sir Frederick C. Dreyer and the Royal Navy by Capt. E. Manners, Senior Naval Officer; a wreath from the Hongkong Naval Volunteer Force by Lieut. Cmdr. H. S. Rouse and Lieut. J. Petrie; and a wreath on behalf of the Navy League by Commodore Frank Elliott and Mr. A. L. Shields, President.

Others present at the ceremony were Messrs. C. Champkin, E. Cock and F. C. Hall.

Trafalgar Day Ball.

Under the patronage of Lady Peel, a Trafalgar Day Ball is to be held on board H.M.S. Tamar on Friday next.

The tickets, which are priced at $7 (gentlemen) and $5 (ladies), include refreshments, drinks, and hot-dogs at the "Ye Old George Inn," which is to be built on the upper deck of H.M.S. Tamar. The music will be provided by a popular dance orchestra.

Among the side show attractions will be a Hornpipe Dance by sailors of H.M.S. Suffolk; a Press Gang from H.M.S. Eagle; and Sea Shanties by men from the 8th Destroyer Flotilla.

£40,000,000 Spent on
Cinemas In Year

STRIKING FIGURES

The amount paid by the public for admission to cinemas during last year was £40,200,000.

This figure was quoted to the Economic Science Section of the British Association meeting at Aberdeen, recently, by Mr. S. Rowson, of London.

He also revealed that the revenue from the Entertainment Tax on cinema admissions last year was £6,700,000.

A detailed analysis of over 300,000 tickets bought during the first half of this year in more than 2,000 cinemas showed, said Mr. Rowson, that the average price paid for admission was a fraction over 10d.

In Britain there were 958,000 admissions a year, or an average of 18,600,000 a week, and Ireland raised the total to 19,250,000.

Out of 475 imported films registered last year for distribution in Great Britain, 330 were registered by nine American-owned companies directly representing leading American film-producing enterprises. The value of those films was 90 or even 95 per cent. of the total. The net value of remittances to the United States in 1933 in respect of films was about £5,300,000, but against this had to be set the receipt from abroad of £600,000 on account of British films.

"There is no market in the world," said Mr. Rowson, "not even the bazaar in the Far East, in which the art of bargaining is exercised with such great skill as in the sale of films."

AN UNUSUAL CINEMA.

The Royal Naval Cinema at Gibraltar is probably unique in the film world, for it is entirely the property of the naval ratings concerned, and run for the exclusive benefit of the personnel stationed on the Rock and their families.

It is no "amateur" undertaking, but a first-class theatre, showing thoroughly up-to-date programmes. With that thoroughness characteristic of all its undertakings the Navy supervises every department, whilst the audience itself is critical and good-humouredly exacting.

The cinema dates back to the old silent days of 1920, when a seaplane shed utilised by American seaplanes during the war was converted into a theatre. The enterprise was financed by the men's own moneys, and was restricted to Service men and their families. With the coming of the talkies the show was temporarily closed, but reopened again on the last day of 1931 fully equipped for talkies.

Commander I. W. Whitehorn, R.N., the commanding officer of H.M.S. C. morant, the depot ship of Gibraltar, is president of the committee administering the affairs of the cinema, and Paymaster Commander L. J. Graham, R.N., is honorary secretary and treasurer. The manager is Chief Petty Officer Writer H. Boshier and the chief operator, Petty Officer A. G. Baker.

The theatre has a capacity of over 600, and the entire profits are devoted to benevolent and recreational activities of the Gibraltar command.

"CLEAN FILMS."

Cardinal Bourne, head of the Catholic Church in England, has now given public and official support to the "clean films" campaign.

He has written, saying so, to Fr. Bernard Whelan, priest-secretary of the Westminster Catholic

QUEEN'S PUDDING

ONE cupful white breadcrumbs, one tablespoonful jam, one dessertspoonful moist sugar, one teaspoonful castor sugar, one-quarter cupful hot milk, one egg. Pour hot milk over breadcrumbs and allow them to stand. Well grease a small piedish and place jam in bottom. Separate the yolk of egg from white. Well whip yolk and stir it into breadcrumbs, adding moist sugar. Put this mixture on top of the jam and put in the oven to allow it to set. Meanwhile whip the white of egg to a stiff froth with a little of the castor sugar. When the mixture is set take it from oven and cover with white of egg, lightly stirring the rest of the sugar into the meringue. Now put dish back into the oven and leave it until the meringue is brown and crisp.

Federation, which is organising the movement here.

He says: "I am glad to know of the successful result of the campaign against undesirable films and especially to learn of the valuable and widespread co-operation which you are receiving from the other dioceses in England and Wales. The campaign seems to me to be organised on sound and prudent lines, and in a way that cannot possibly give offence to any right-minded person. May God bless and prosper your efforts."

SIR CEDRIC HARDWICKE COMPLETES WORK.

Sir Cedric Hardwicke has finished his work on "The King of Paris," the British and Dominions satire on stage folk and their ways. The shooting schedule was carefully arranged in order to give him the chance of making an early start with his theatrical tour, the scenes in which he appears being filmed first. Meanwhile plenty of work remains to be done on the film by the other members of the company.

EXPEDITION TO ASIA

DROUGHT-PROOF
GRASS WANTED

PROTECTING PRAIRIE STOCK

Washington, Oct. 10. Because the great drought turned millions of acres of fertile farm lands and grazing pastures into a parched sterile desert the U.S. Agricultural Department is sending an expedition into Central Asia to search for pasture grasses that will resist drought.

In the present crisis millions of starving cattle and sheep had to be bought and slaughtered by the government because there was no hope of feeding them then or in the near future. The introduction of a "drought proof" grass would do much to prevent the repetition of such a large-scale disaster, agricultural experts feel.

Discussing the expedition, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Henry A. Wallace, said: "On the edge of the Gobi desert in Central Asia are great pasture lands where the summer temperatures often go above 100 degrees and the winter temperatures more than 40 degrees below zero."

"The rainfall in this area is less than 16 inches annually but apparently there are certain pasture grasses which through thousands of years of natural selection have learned to adapt themselves to an environment as severe as that of our great prairie states this past year."

RESISTING CORROSION.

"Most of the rainfall comes in the summer and is sometimes torrential in nature, thus causing erosion. We are hoping to discover not only drought-resistant pasture grasses but also grasses and shrubs with root stocks of a type suitable for preventing wind and water erosion in dry land areas."

"As a leader in charge of the current expedition to the Hinggan Mountains and the plains adjoining the Gobi, the Department has been fortunate to secure the collaboration of Prof. Nicholas Roerich, the internationally recognized authority on Central Asia."

"For the last eleven years Prof. Roerich has made extensive expeditions into Sikkim, Kashmir, Tibet, Chinese Turkestan, Mongolia and the Gobi Desert and Altai region where his exhaustive studies of the scientific and cultural backgrounds of the entire Asiatic field have been second to none."

"Since 1929 he has also been interested in botanical expedition into Western Tibet, studying the medicinal plants of this region. Because of this background which has caused him to be held in high esteem throughout Asia, we are hopeful of an unusually fruitful expedition."

"Accompanying Prof. Roerich are his son, George, Roerich, an expert on Central Asia and H. G. MacMillan and J. L. Stephens of the Bureau of Plant Industry, who are fundamentally trained in the study of American grasses."

and the effect is likely to be a film famine. Production during the coming season will, it is stated, reach the total of 173 features. The official quota allows for the import of 176 films from other countries, but of these 70 must be silent, so that the industry will have only 278 sound pictures for the whole year's supply.

BRITISH MOTOR RACING FILM.

All the thrills of high speed motor racing will shortly be seen for the first time in a British film. Under the provisional title of "Death Drives Through," Clifford Taylor productions are using this theme for a picture which will feature Robert Douglas, Dorothy Boucher, Miles Mander, Frank Atkinson, Percy Walsh, and Lillian Gunn. Edward L. Cahn will direct.

WOMAN'S LONELY HOME IN NORTH WILDS

QUITE CONTENT AS BRIDE OF VETERAN PROSPECTOR

BECAUSE the culinary art of Beatrice Mason did not include making bread, she won for herself, contrary to what might be anticipated under such circumstances, both a husband and a home, far north of the Arctic circle in a land that has never been surveyed. She does not know for sure whether Masonland, where they live, is in the United States or Canada. The nearest post office is at Fort Yukon, Alaska, six hundred miles away, whither the Masons travel once a year for their supplies and the ever-welcome batch of letters that will be awaiting them. Their only other mail hour comes when the ever romantic and acerbic-coated figure of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police comes mushing up to Masonland on his winter patrol. Quite impartially, therefore, they patronize the mail service of both the United States and Canada.

Beatrice Mason's arrival in this "no man's land" where hers was as manager of the very sanatorium, which Archdeacon Stuck had established, so she broke the fetters that bound her to civilization and made for the Far North. To-day Beatrice Mason mashes through the trackless woods as did the archdeacon.

When she first arrived at Fort Yukon, though, she found that her manager's duties were in reality those of a cook, which troubled her not at all, though up to then she had done but little cooking. There at Fort Yukon, a settlement of about six hundred Indians and three hundred whites, the meals were plain and the cooking easy, except the bread-making.

It came to pass that when the entire sanatorium staff had failed, one after another, to teach her to make a light brown, crusty loaf of bread, an "old-timer" happened along. He was one Willoughby Mason and offered to coach this newcomer in the subtle art of bread-making, which every dweller of the North must know. Where others failed he succeeded and not only taught her to make good bread but took advantage of those lessons and turned them into courtship periods, finally winning his "pupil" for a bride. They waited until her year at Fort Yukon was up and then there was a simple July wedding in the little log church where the wild arctic flowers provided the floral arch and where her "bridesmaids," as she humorously expresses it, were two members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

VETERAN PROSPECTOR.

For more than twenty years Willoughby Mason had been prospecting and hunting and now he took his wife with him on a six hundred mile journey through the "highways" or rivers of the North. First they went up the Porcupine and then on up the Bell until Masonland was reached. It took three weeks to make the trip in a leisurely fashion, going in a launch that had an engine of twelve horsepower. During the day's run it was nothing to glance shoreward and see a bear, moose or caribou looking with astonishment at the intruders in the land they thought exclusively theirs.

When Mrs. Mason set forth from Fort Yukon she resolved to prove by example that no matter how far one travelled from civilization one could bring the beautiful into one's daily life. That has been the keynote to the happy life led at Masonland.

HAND MADE LUXURIES.

When the framework of their house was up, hers was the task to smooth the logs on the inside, to make a dressing table from packing cases and shelves from boards for their books. Every luxury they wished must be made from what was at hand, except the stove and the bedsprings they brought with them. She remarked that it was extraordinary how much they packed in that thirty-foot launch and the smaller boat attached, for they transported not only the human beings but seven dogs, toboggans, bedding, clothing, tools and a year's supply of food and other essentials such as gasoline. But the five gallon tin cans of gasoline, when empty, became wash-bottles and water buckets, while the smaller tins served as work baskets and flower boxes.

This magnificent cradle has been presented by the city of Naples to the Italian Crown Prince and his wife for their first born child, Princess Maria Pia.

probably the first white woman's foot to tread and where she can indulge in the pastime of shopping but once a year, was the result of childhood summers spent in the Adirondacks. There she met a hermit who told her stories and carved a toy dog for her. From that moment she resolved to live some day in this hermit did, "way off in the woods where there would be no going to call her to school and where she could race through the forests to her heart's content without a thought of keeping starched frocks immaculate.

Later on, this resolve crystallized when she read "Ten Thousand Miles With a Dog Sled" by Hudson Stuck. As she read, in fancy she mushed with him as he visited both Indian and white settlements in Alaska, for he was their archdeacon. Now she was going to bring that childhood wish to fruition, somehow.

AMBITION ACHIEVED.

Not having independent means, Beatrice enrolled as hygiene and social worker for Fort Yukon. It came about that there was an open-

Two old grape gatherers quenching their thirst during the work in one of the Rhine province farms.

Her woman's touch was needed to make the rooms attractive with curtains, draperies and pillows. The rudely constructed furniture was painted in cheerful, blending tones. True to her idea to draw the beautiful to their home, each year when she returns from Fort Yukon she brings something to embellish the interior, if it is only fresh paint and new muslin for curtains.

Although she is indeed a pioneer woman of the North who must do the washing, cooking, housework and mending, she sets aside an hour or two each day for recreation. In the winter she can go snowshoeing or mush along with her dogs, while indoors she reads and writes and listens to the radio.

RADIO WOES.

At first the Masons were completely isolated, without neighbours or radio. Now they have some Indian neighbours twelve miles away and a radio, which however gives out at most inopportune moments. When they hear the beginning of some momentous news, they may have to wait to know the ending until they reach Fort Yukon in the next June. Their neighbours in this northern land are Indians. There is an Indian camp two hundred miles away, with individual families nearer.

The days pass happily for Beatrice Mason at Masonland. It is the first winter that stands out most in retrospect, when they saw no one but themselves for ten months, when they trimmed the Christmas tree with strips of tin curled off from keys used in the opening of cans of food and when, as she writes:

"We were here alone, isolated as if on the moon, without visitors, mail, radio or communication of any kind with the world beyond. There has never been a winter to equal or surpass it. It was ideal to me and the choicest experience of my life."

ROMAN LONDON OF TO-DAY

LONDINIUM WALK LASTS LIFETIME ANCIENT DAYS RECALLED

Visitors to London, and even Londoners themselves, should make a trip round Roman London. The total distance is little more than three miles, but a whole day may well be set apart for it. The trip is full of interest, and, with the aid of a little imagination, a walk round the walls of Londinium will provide memories that may last a lifetime.

The original City walls enclosed an area of some 350 acres—less than a square mile. The six gates of entry from the surrounding "country" were: Aldgate, Bishopsgate, Cripplegate, Aldersgate, Newgate, and Ludgate.

The starting point should be All Hallows Church, close to the Tower of London—Berkyngeschirke-by-the-Tower, as it was, and still is faintly described. This church, by the way, is the home of Tox II.

In the Undercroft of the church—which is open to the public at all reasonable hours, will be found a fascinating model of Roman London as it existed in the early part of the fourth century. The model should be studied carefully before the walk begins. An official of the church is always available to explain the model. A booklet, entitled "Roman London," price 3d., may be purchased from the official. It contains some very interesting particulars, and also a lucid map of the area covered by the model, and will, therefore, be found invaluable.

In the Undercroft, some 15 ft. underground, may be seen, in situ, a portion of the floor of a Roman shop dating back to the time of Hadrian, in the middle of the first century. Leaving the church, the first point of interest is "Aldgate," which may be reached by way of the Minories, a famous street running parallel with but just outside the line of the City wall. A tablet on the front wall of a building in Aldgate High-street, a few yards east of the Minories, denotes the actual site of the gate. In Roman times the thoroughfare now represented by Aldgate High-street was the main road to Colchester. A few yards west of the gate is the famous Aldgate pump.

Passing through Duke-street and Canon-street in the direct line of the wall, we arrive at the site of "Bishopsgate," through which visitors from York and Lincoln entered London, then on through Wormwood-street to "London Wall," another famous thoroughfare which needs no explanation. The "Walbrook," a navigable river in those days, flowed under the City wall at Finsbury-circus, and appeared to have had its source just beyond Moorfields. A portion of the original Roman wall is still in existence, and may be seen as we go on our way.

Just beyond "Cripplegate," the wall turned sharp left verging towards the centre of Aldersgate-street, touching the main thoroughfare at the Church of St. Anne and St. Agnes. This marks the site of "Aldersgate." This presumably was the farmers' gate since it led to the open country and to a limited area of pastureland. Most of the country outside the wall was forest or marsh, but a few farms existed. Smithfield Market, west of Aldersgate-street, stands on the site of one of the farms.

The wall continued along the northern side of the General Post Office (St. Martin-in-the-Fields), finally turning sharp left at the Old Bailey, where the Central Criminal Courts are situated. These must not be confused with the Royal Courts of Justice, in the Strand, where civil actions only are tried.

The site of "Newgate" is indicated on the wall of the courts in Newgate-street. In Roman times, this thoroughfare was known as Walling-street, and led to Verulamium (St. Albans).

The next and last gate, "Ludgate," may be reached through the Old Bailey, which roughly follows the direction of the Wall. A tablet on the front wall of the Church of St. Martin, on Ludgate Hill, slightly to the left of the Old Bailey, marks the site of the gate.

"Ludgate" led the citizens of Londinium to the settlement of Westminster, at which point there was a ford across the Thames.

It is interesting to follow the road from Ludgate a little way towards Westminster. At Ludgate Circus, looking north and south, we see the old valley of the River Fleet, or Holbourne—a very important river in those days. Farringdon-street now occupies the valley. Continuing up Fleet-street and passing Chancery-lane we come to the site of the Temple Bar, at which point the Strand begins. Here, too, are the Royal Courts of Justice.

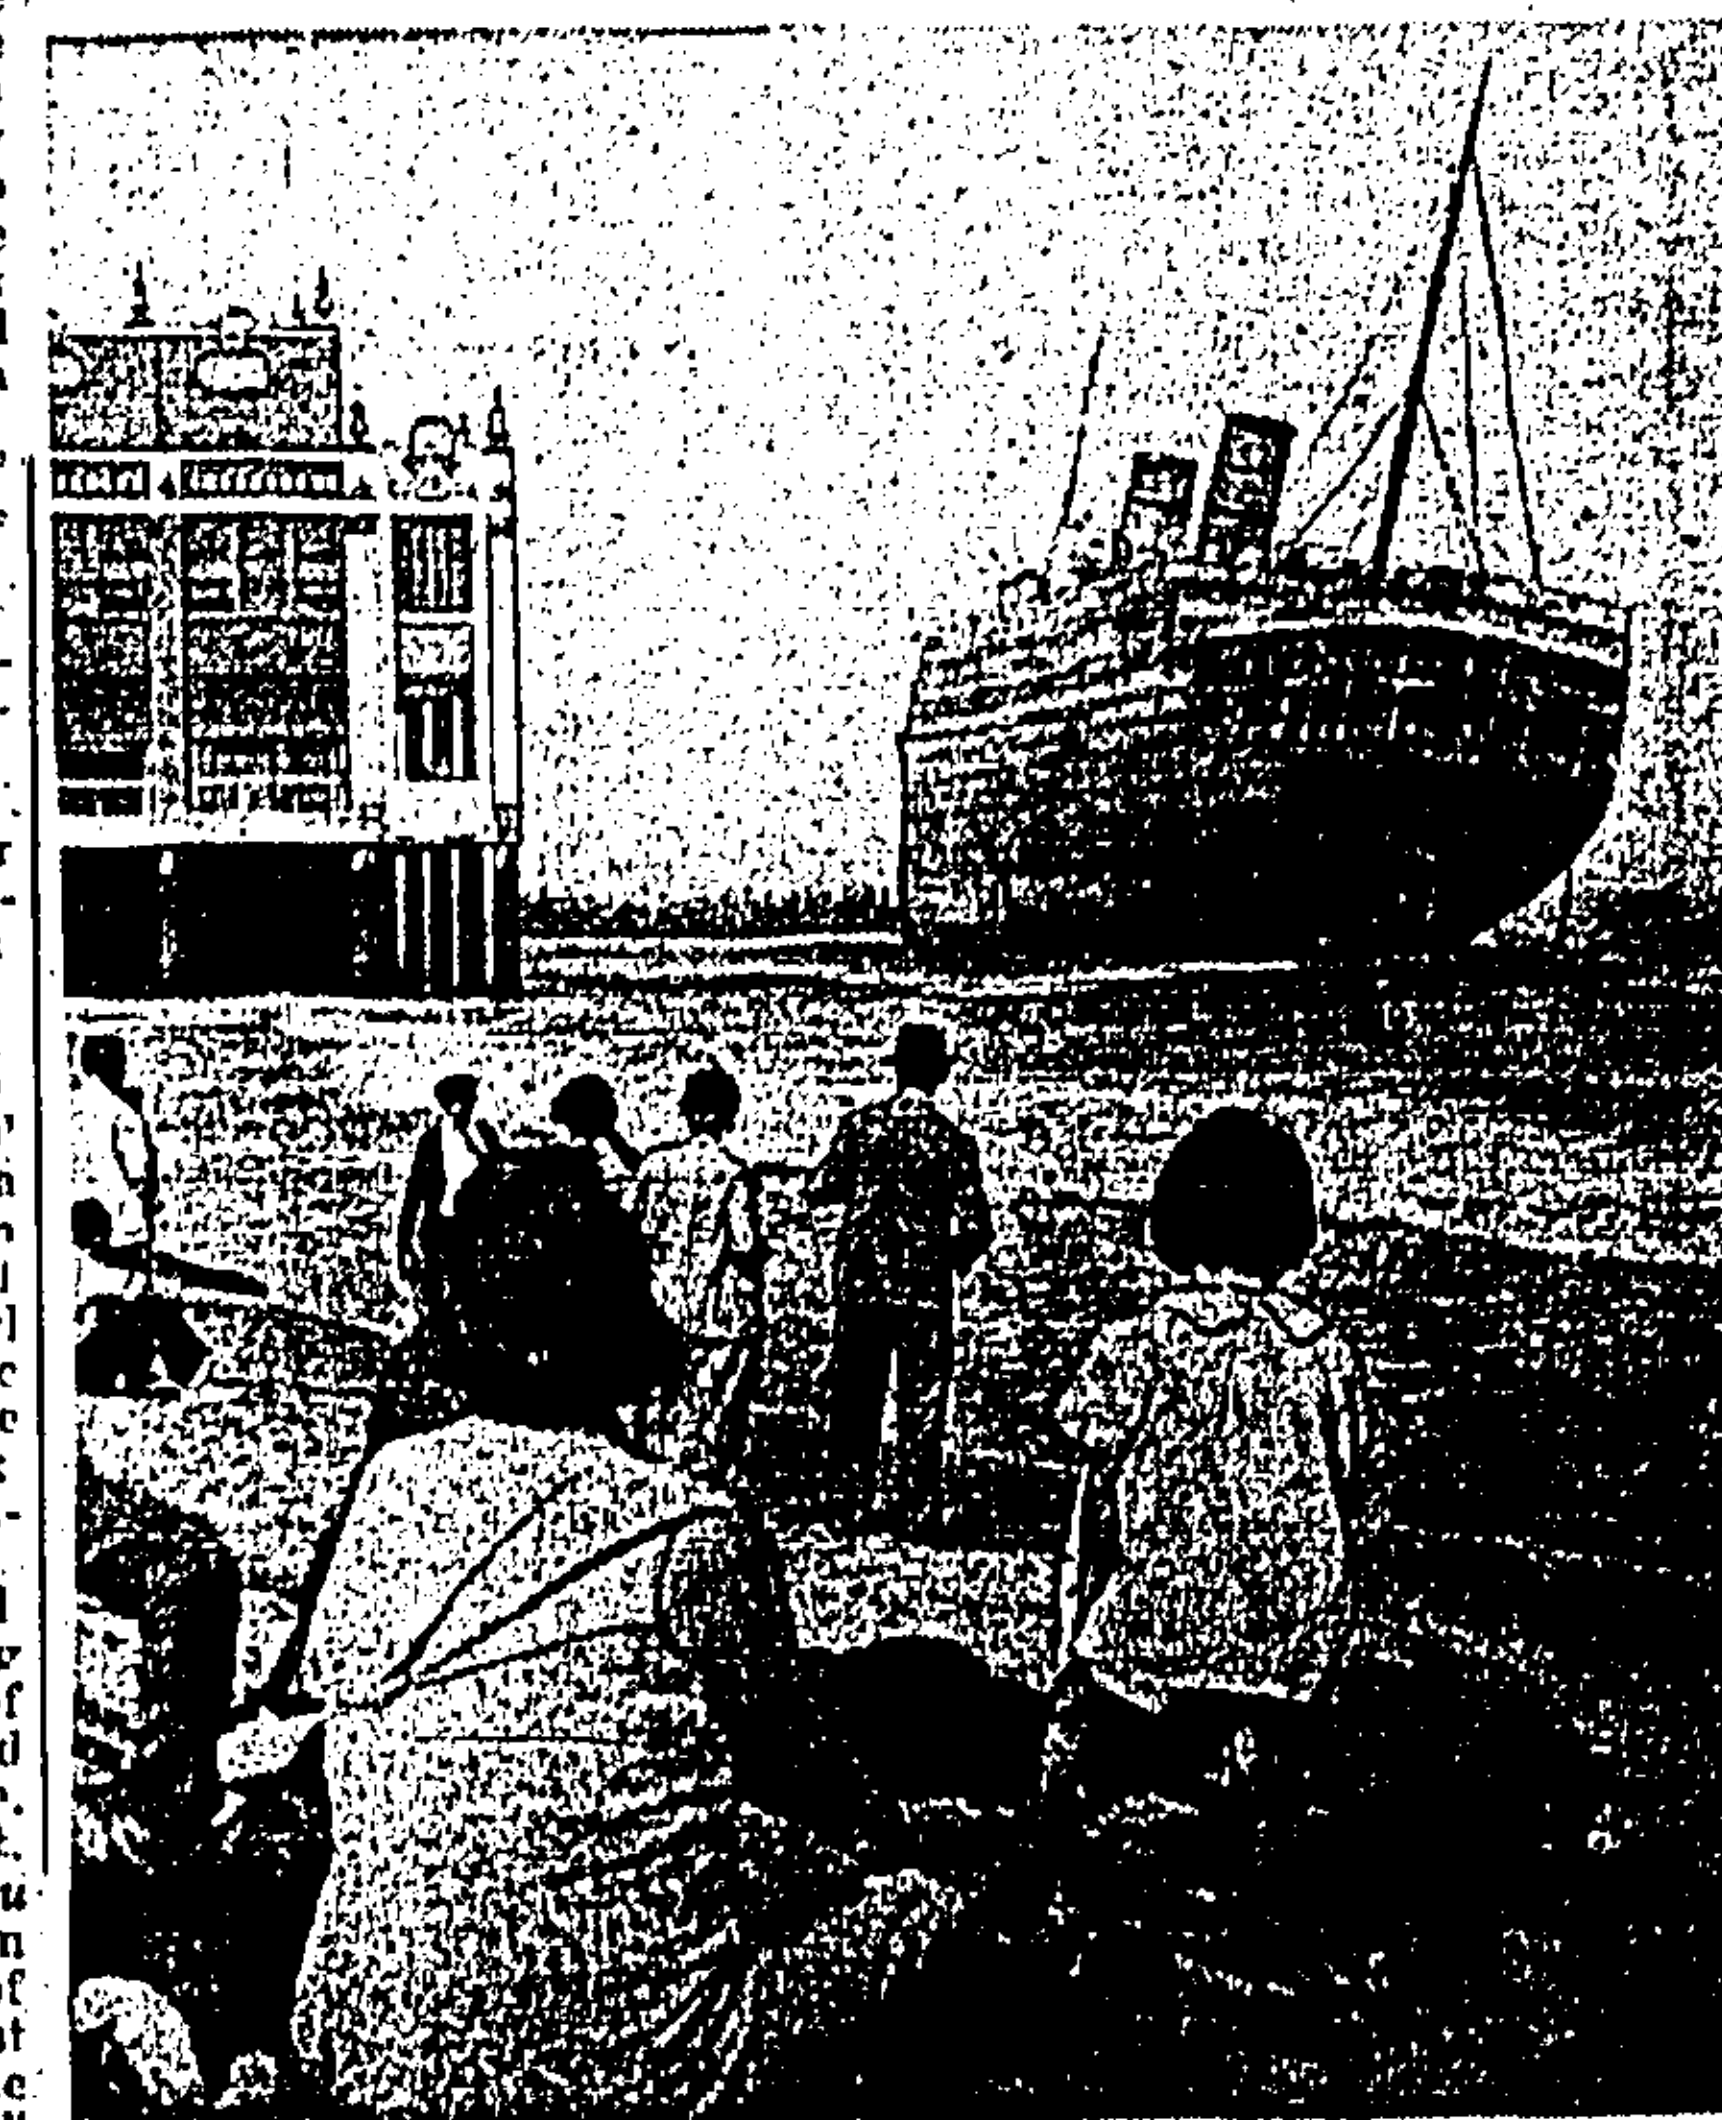

Along the Strand, past St. Clement Danes Church of "oranges and lemons" fame, and leading down towards the river, is a small opening called Roman Bath Alley, where a Roman bath, still fed by its original spring water, may be seen.

A visit to Waterloo Bridge, now being demolished, will be worth while, since it may be that last opportunity of seeing this famous bridge. Descending by the temporary steps to the Embankment, it can then be determined whether we finish the walk at that point or return along the Embankment, following, as far as possible, the direction of the southern or river wall to the Tower of London, thus completing the circuit.

ALTERNATIVE.

An alternative, and very interesting, conclusion to the trip would be to continue westwards along the Embankment, past Cleopatra's Needle, to Westminster, boarding a "river-bus" at Westminster pier, journeying back to London Bridge by water. The river, of course, is full of general interest, but points of particular interest could be noted on the way, as, for instance, Blackfriars Bridge, where the Fleet River entered the Thames, Cannon-street railway bridge, which marks the point where ships of commerce once sailed up the river Walbrook.

Finally, London Bridge, some 200 yards beyond which is the site of the original Roman bridge. Disembarking at London Bridge, the walk could be continued through Thames-street, passing in turn the Monument, Billingsgate Fish Market, and the Custom House. We should then be within a few yards of the Tower of London, which marks the easternmost point of the old City wall.

The wreckage of the fire-scorched American liner "Morro Castle" which is riding a saw-har within a hundred feet of Ashbury Park Beach is becoming a first class attraction for the little resort.

The student of manners must search the past for origin and example. The man with something to learn about dress may look in a hat for information.

Of course, it is universally agreed that newspapers offer the most effective advertising media, but unless the circulation is guaranteed beyond all possible shadow of doubt, that vague bugbear... the "unknown quantity" creeps in.

come into the scheme. Moreover, this benevolent attitude is also Italy's. If Germany does indeed agree there is no other country which can reasonably object. But it must not for a moment be supposed that the matter is settled. Moreover, it must frankly be admitted that Germany has some reason for looking askance at the proposal. When we examine the nature of the guarantees, we are compelled to recognize that they are not quite so favourable to Germany as they appear to be. Can she, in fact, imagine a case in which France would be called upon to help her against Russia, or Russia to help her against France? May she not be inclined to regard the "Eastern Locarno" as a camouflage behind which France enjoys the advantage without the odium of a network of alliances?

In any event the "Eastern Locarno" plan has suffered a severe set-back, some say death blow. Had M. Barthou lived, he might have secured some compromise, given such assurances that Germany, Poland and the rest could not have doubted the sincerity of the French. As it is, the nations still await a leader to show the way to an Eastern Locarno.

POPULAR CAMERA

HANDY LITTLE ROLLEICORD

One of the most popular cameras at the present time is the Rollei-cord twin-lens roll-film reflex, made by the well-known firm of Franke and Heidecke, of Brunnswick, Germany.

This excellent little camera is modelled on the famous Rolleiflex, with certain simplifications, so that it can be sold at a much lower price, viz., one which brings it within the purchasing power of a new and larger class of users who have looked with envy on the possessors of the Rolleiflex. Although the Rollei-cord has not automatic wind of the film nor one or two other features of the Rolleiflex, it is, nevertheless, a first-rate little instrument of most attractive design and efficient performance.

The taking lens is an f/4.5 Tessar of 3-inches focus, giving excellent definition over the 2 1/2 x 2 1/2 ins. film. The finder-lens is a Helioscope, giving a very bright image on the focusing screen. Focusing is done by a milled disc on the right-hand side of the camera, which is also fitted with a focusing scale showing distances up to 0.8 metre (less than 3 ft.). The hood of the upper "camera" erects itself on being released, and is fitted with a magnifier which is brought into operation simply by lifting up a spring-held plate (carrying the magnifier) on the back of the hood, and turning it over the top of the hood, where it is engaged by a catch. The magnifier can be put into position in a second. The front of the hood can also be turned back to serve as a direct-vision finder when using the camera at the eye level. This convenient and efficient design of the hood is on a par with that of other parts of the camera.

The Compur shutter, for example, is arranged so that the lever serves for both setting and releasing it. When holding the camera, you press the lever to the right to set it, and to the left to release it. The shutter gives exposures up to 1/300th sec. in addition to bulb and time, and carries the iris diaphragm of the lens, which can be closed down as far as f/32. The single release of a metal cap unlocks the cover of the film chambers. Of these the upper film, carrying the take-up spool, is fitted with a little rod and milled disc which actuates an exposure counter placed on the left-hand side of the camera and arranged so that the numbers 1, 2, 3, and so on, up to 12 successively come into view as the film is wound on after each exposure. When No. 12 shows, one pushes a little catch-button, and the film indicator then automatically returns to No. 1.

The design of the camera allows of the two lenses being placed with the minimum of separation, so that effect due to difference of viewpoint is reduced to the minimum. Such effect is always a minor matter, except when taking subjects at very close quarters, and in regard to this the makers have provided compensation, so that the amount of subject seen on the ground-glass is actually obtained on the film. With these many excellent features the Rollei-cord should have no difficulty in making innumerable friends for itself on account of its very moderate price and the low cost of film, 12 exposures being obtained on the popular 8-exposure 3 1/2 x 2 1/4 films. The camera can be obtained in a leather case of a special design, which allows of the case remaining attached to the camera when the latter is in use.

CHINESE GRADUATES IN ENGINEERING.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR BEING TRAINED IN ENGLAND

An interesting lecture was given by Mr. J. R. Burgess-Coupland, an English engineer well-known in South China, to the members of the University Engineering Society on Friday last. Mr. Burgess-Coupland has been concerned during recent years with the installation of heavy fuel oil engines in South China, and is at present engaged in the supervising the erection of four 600 h.p. engines in Canton.

In introducing the speaker, Professor Middleton Smith, the President of the Society, mentioned that a number of Hongkong University Engineering graduates had already received the advantage of two years practical experience in large workshops in England. Other Engineering graduates had taken post graduate courses in the Universities of London or Liverpool. In every case the works managers or university professors responsible for the supervision of their work had greatly praised their industry and technical ability.

Mr. Burgess-Coupland commenced his lecture by saying that he wanted to speak for a short time on the training of graduate and undergraduate engineers in English Engineering Works. He said in part: "The really successful engineer is the man who is both very sound practically, and theoretically, combined with plenty of common sense and capable of handling men. There are many branches of engineering; I propose to deal, this evening, with the mechanical side only, and give you a rough idea of what your training would be if you underwent a course of training in England. It is a life, in most cases, full of interest and full of hard work, and I do not advise any of you to take up engineering with a view to having an easy life where money is to be made quickly and easily."

Methods of Training.

There are one or two methods of training. The first method, and I think one of the most pleasant, is to graduate from university by taking an engineering degree. Practical training is obtained during vacations, and whether you have obtained your degree or not, depending on whether you prefer studying the theory of heat engines in your spare time, or going to see the movies, you ultimately try to obtain a junior position in an engineering firm. When you have obtained this position, you will probably be required to do at least two years in the shops and six months in the drawing office, technical dept., and possibly sales, depending on what side of engineering you wish to take up. It is a long training, you will already have done 3 or 4 years at the University and a further two on a very small salary, say, 30 shillings a week for your first year and 40s. a week for your second. The second method of training, which really does not concern you here, as you are all going to graduate or have graduated through this University, is to go into the Works for 5 years after your school period, say, at the age of 17 or 18, and to do your theoretical training at the same time as the practical.

Engineering is quite a crowded profession, but a hard worker with common sense, or a brilliant man, is assured of a job. After training in England, many of the graduates and theoretical training either at the above two methods, who join large firms afterwards, ultimately go out to these firms' agents overseas.

Great Demand in China.
Chinese students and graduates who have been well trained both practically and theoretically, have a wonderful opportunity in China, now that the country is developing so fast. From my own experience, and I think there are many who have the same views, there are at the present time comparatively few good practical Chinese mechanical or civil engineers who are capable of taking charge of large schemes, such as railway construction, bridge building, erecting large power houses, etc. There are, of course, a number of these men, but considering the size of the country there are few in comparison with the demand.

There is, therefore, an enormous scope, and you, undergraduates, have before you a wonderful opportunity both to serve your country, make a name for yourselves, or leave something behind by which you will be remembered.

You probably want to know what the duties are like in a manufacturing works in England, what are your working hours, how much does it cost you to live, etc. Usually, work is commenced at 7.30 a.m. and finishes at 6 o'clock, one hour off for lunch, a half day on Saturdays, no work on Sundays. Your lodgings cost about 25 to 35 shillings a week, depending on the locality of the works.

You will have a programme arranged for you at the commencement of your training. After the works experience you will probably go out on what is called "an outside erection job", where you will assist to erect a power plant in a factory, depending of course on the type of machinery the factory in which you are training is manufacturing.

Mr. Burgess-Coupland showed a number of slides illustrating the various work processes concerned with the manufacture of 60 h.p. engine now being erected in Canton, and the close of the lecture a number of questions relating to the opportunities for obtaining graduate apprenticeships, details of life in a large works etc. were asked by the undergraduates. Mr. Burgess-Coupland assured his audience that they will meet with a very hearty reception in England, and that the experience of Chinese graduate apprentices had always been that the British workmen went out of their way to help them as they were anxious to smooth the way for any one from overseas. A hearty vote of thanks concluded the lecture.

POLICE LIBEL CASE

there rely on the defence of privilege. "Or further, you may defend yourself, by saying that these letters are not capable of the meaning which the prosecution places on it."

JUSTIFICATION PLEA.

"There is further another defence open to a person charged with this particular offence: it is that the words complained of are true, and that it is for the public benefit that the facts stated in these letters should be known. On your plea of not guilty you are not allowed to raise that last defence, but if the last defence is the one raised, I must enter a special plea of justification."

"In that event, it will be necessary for you to put your case in words to this effect: I allege that on September 2, or whatever the date may be, P. C. So-and-So accepted a bribe of $5 from So-and-So. It is only fair that I should warn you further that although you are entitled to the opportunity which I am now giving you of altering the plea of not guilty to the special plea of justification, you must remember that if that plea is false, the Court is entitled to take into consideration the fact that you have raised that unsuccessful plea in aggravation of your offence."

"The accused elected to adhere to his general plea of not guilty, and the trial was then opened with the following jury being empanelled:—Messrs. D. A. Goodwin (foreman), V. F. Azevedo, J. H. Hunt, H. Rumball, Y. Yam, P. Kingston Kwok, and F. P. Pereira.

CROWN CASE.

The Assistant Attorney-General, in opening the case for the Crown, and addressing the jury, said that it might be a matter for surprise to them, as members of the public, that a man who made complaints about the police should be liable to be charged with libel if he did so in writing. At this stage, he should tell them that the essence of this offence consisted in the statements being untrue, and it was an offence whether against a policeman or any other person, where the person who committed the offence knew it was libel and published it by sending it, or causing it to be sent.

BOMB EXPLOSION.

The accused, said the Assistant Attorney-General, ran a mah-jong club on the ground floor of 87 Jaffe Road, in the Wanchai district, and was on friendly terms with one Kasano, a fellow-national, until the latter started a rival establishment at No. 84, three doors away, and took away much of his business. An incident which might, or might not, have an important bearing on the case, occurred, this being the exploding of a bomb on the staircase of the accused's premises. It was, in any event, certain from the statements to be produced, that accused blamed Kasano for taking his custom away, and might or might not be taken together with the fact that on the day before the bomb explosion a letter was received by the police, the first of a series.

This letter purported to give information regarding the existence of many Japanese brothers all over Wanchai, and that one of the heads in control was to be found at No. 84 Jaffe Road (at the same address, it was noted, as accused's rival in the mah-jong business). Further, it alluded to a secret

SERIOUS FIRE IN HANKOW

Hankow, Oct. 21.

A disastrous fire broke out this afternoon in a suburb of Hankow and quickly spread over a wide area, with the result that over 200 native houses were burned down before it was brought under control.

No casualties have been reported as yet, but the local authorities are confronted with the task of providing emergency camps to accommodate the homeless. —Central News.

society to be located on the first floor of No. 17 Luard Road, in the same district which held midnight meetings and conducted gambling during the day.

It alleged also that although the police had entered the floor they had made no arrests there. The writer esteemed it a great favour if interest was taken in the letter as the conditions complained of were a danger to the public.

THREE LETTERS.

No immediate action was taken by the police, until four days later on the 27th August, when a series of three letters were received simultaneously by the Inspector General of the Secretary for Chinese Affairs and the Colonial Secretary.

Detective Sergeant Baker found nothing wrong at No. 17 Luard Road or at 84 Jaffe Road when he visited those two places on that night. A surprise raid at midnight two days later by both Sergeant Baker and Sgt. Fitches under the Ordinances dealing with gambling and with secret societies was also without result, although carried out exhaustively.

The next day, a second series of three letters was received by the authorities, and these narrowed down the scope of the allegations to one person in the Force. They described the officer as being "tall and thin, with a bald head," and they accurately described Sgt. Baker, said counsel.

Counsel went on to detail the police investigations that followed, resulting in the particular typewriter with which the letters were written being traced as one having been borrowed on the material dates by the accused from a well-known Japanese personality at Wanchai known as Nagasaki Joe. He also described the finding of similar notepaper and used carbon paper bearing allegedly incriminating impressions in an attaché case belonging to the accused.

When making a statement at the conclusion of the Police Court proceedings, accused blamed a Chinese friend as having misinterpreted his instructions when making up the letters for him, and sending them to three different officials instead of one.

EVIDENCE CALLED.

Mr. R. Todd, Chief Assistant of the Secretary for Chinese Affairs; Mr. F. Angus, clerk at the Colonial Office; Chief Inspector Marks; Mr. A. L. Cole, Secretary at the Central Police Station; and Sub-Inspector Whant gave evidence as to the arrival and transmission of the letters which formed the subject of the charges.

Mr. E. A. Von Kobza-Nary, B.A., artist and photographer, said he had made a study of the subject. He produced photographic enlargements of used carbon sheets from which the last impressions could be made out and said the peculiarities of the typewriter used could also be identified.

The hearing is proceeding.

CHICKENS AND SAUSAGES

FORMER POLICE "BOYS" FALSE PRETENCE

Tao San, a 26-year-old unemployed man, who stated that he was formerly a "boy" employed by detective at Wanchai, was charged with the theft of false pretences, of nine chickens and eight catfish of sausages, valued at $18, from two widows, Lo Hak, 61 years, and Leung Ho, 24 years. Defendant pleaded guilty and was sentenced to two months' hard labour.

It was stated by Detective Sergeant Franklin, who appeared for the prosecution, that at 8 a.m. yesterday defendant met the complainants coming from the Yau-mat Police Station and he spoke to them. Defendant told the complainants that he had the authority to sell the chickens and sausages, and took them from the complainants saying that they might be arrested for having possession of them. He then walked through the back door of the Yau-mat Police Station and went out of the front door. When he was walking out of the front door he was seen by a constable and was arrested.

POLO CUP FINAL.

Royal Artillery Qualify Against Borderers.

On Friday last the Royal Artillery beat the 24th Regiment (South Wales Borderers) by five goals to three, and thereby entered the final of the K.O.Y.L.I. Cup Tournament. They will meet the Civilian at Cowesway Bay this afternoon, the match commencing at 5 p.m.

The teams on Friday were:

ROYAL ARTILLERY 24th REGIMENT.
G. H. Portman, Capt. P. V. Yates, Major Brennan, No. 3, J. L. Jordan, R. E. Wood, Sub-Captain, No. 1, W. W. Metcalfe, No. 1, C. F. Blackden.

The Gunners were unfortunate in having their captain, Capt. P. V. Yates, away, and on previous form it seemed likely that the 24th Regiment would win. The Gunners, however, played a magnificent game and the 24th were rather off form. Nevertheless on the day's play undoubtedly the better team won.

Portman was the life and soul of the Royal Artillery team. His defence was sound and he was instrumental in scoring most of their goals, which occurred chiefly in the second and third chukkas where the Gunners had the better of the game. Brennan was hitting well and the forwards, Skeg and Metcalfe, played a useful game.

The 24th Regiment never seemed properly to get going. They pressed hard in the first and fourth chukkas, but the backs were not hitting the ball as well as they usually do and the forwards were apt to be too far up. Yates, Blackden and Skeg each scored one goal, while Jordan was responsible for most of their attacking movements.

RECREIO HOCKEY

Teams Against Punjabis and H.K.S.R.A.

The Club du Recreio have two hockey fixtures this week. Tomorrow they will be opposed to the Punjabis "A" XI on the Marina ground, bully-off at 5 p.m., when they will be represented by H. Britto; A. On Friday they will play a team from the H.K.S.R.A. on the Marina, bully-off at 5 p.m. Their team will be: H. Britto; A. A. dos Remedios, Dr. A. M. Rodrigues; J. Gonsalves, W. A. Reed, A. A. R. Botelho; C. Almada, P. Nolasco, A. M. Xavier, N. Beltrao and B. Gosnno.

SHANGHAI GOLF.

Marine Wins Amateur Championship.

Shanghai, Oct. 21. The amateur golf championship, played here to-day, was won by J. B. Broadus, a corporal in the United States Marines. He won by seven holes, his aggregate being 200.

F. D. Hunter, accountant in Butterfield and Swire, was second with an aggregate of 207.

Broadus did the four rounds in 76, 67, 75 and 72.

Hunter took 69, 77, 71 and 80.

The first 36 holes were played at Seekingjiao and the second 36 at Hungjiao.

Hunter was one up at the end of the morning's play but fell away in the afternoon. Broadus's second round of 67 sets a new course record. —Reuter.

Question Of Culpability

The Editor, Hongkong Telegraph,

Sir,—In face of the failure of the appeal in the Nullah Murder case, the question of capital punishment again crops up. It will be recalled that Ng Lo-yuen, the defendant in this case, was first tried by an Ordinary Jury who failed to agree on a verdict. He was subsequently retried by a Special Jury who returned a verdict of guilty, but strongly recommended mercy.

Many of us who have followed closely the proceedings throughout this case, still entertain doubt as to whether the defendant could single-handed and in a drunken state, have managed to pick up five lively children one by one and throw them into the nullah within a very short space of time.

There are others who have expressed doubt as to whether the defendant should not have been guilty of manslaughter instead of murder, in view of the evidence of intoxication. However, a verdict has been rendered by the Special Jury trying the case. Special Jurors are all selected for their proved integrity and sound judgment. Their verdict must, therefore, be accepted as a fair one. We are especially impressed with their fairness in making a strong recommendation for mercy. So reasonable a recommendation, we have no doubt, will be given effect to by the Authority in due course. But we are told that in a case not long ago, the recommendation for mercy by an Ordinary Jury was disregarded. Whatever reason there might have been for the course of action in that case, we sincerely hope that the recommendation in the present case will not meet with the same fate.

Besides the special circumstance in this case which would seem fully to warrant sparing the poor fellow his life, the fact that the recommendation for mercy was made by a Special Jury, ought to carry some weight. Moreover, it should be noted that this recommendation was not made merely by reason of general objection to capital punishment, as none of the Special Jurors took advantage of the Chief Justice's offer to excuse any one having such conscientious objection from serving. PACIFIC FLIGHT.

KINGSFORD SMITH'S NEW RECORD.

Brisbane, Oct. 20.

Air-Commodore Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith, accompanied by Captain P. G. Taylor, a wireless operator and navigator, hopped off from Brisbane at 4.5 a.m. (2.5 a.m. Hongkong time) on the first stage of a daring attempt to reach California.

The weather was beautifully clear, a full moon turning night almost into day.

The route used by Kingsford-Smith on his previous trans-Pacific crossing from east to west is being used for the present attempt.

The daring aviators will make a non-stop flight to Suva, the capital of the small islands of Fiji, a distance of 1,825 miles, a second non-stop hop from Suva to Honolulu (3,288 miles) and the third lap from Honolulu to San Francisco (2,405 miles). The total distance involved is 7,521 miles.

Kingsford-Smith's machine, which has been named "Lady Southern Cross" is a Lockheed Altair tri-motored monoplane, which was purchased by public subscription in order to allow the intrepid aviator to participate in the Melbourne Centenary Race. An untimely mishap to the machine prevented Kingsford-Smith from leaving Australia in time to reach Mildenhall in time for the start of the race. —United Press.

"All O. K."

San Francisco, Oct. 21.

The Matson liner Monterey, whose position is approximately midway between Auckland and Suva, reports that it is intercepting wireless messages from Kingsford-Smith. The last message received stated that "all were O.K. aboard the Lady Southern Cross." —United Press.

Arrival at Suva.

Suva, Fiji, Oct. 21.

During the whole history of aviation only one aeroplane has ever flown across the Pacific to land on Fijian shores.

That was in June, 1928, when, flying over the intervening 3,288 miles of ocean, separating Fiji from Honolulu, Kingsford-Smith piloted the "Southern Cross" safely across the ocean from San Francisco to Brisbane.

At 4 p.m. to-day (Sydney Time) the same aviator, piloting the "Lady Southern Cross", made a beautiful landing at Albert Park.

The whole European and native population of Suva turned out to welcome the daring aviator and his companions, Kingsford-Smith receiving an uproarious ovation as he stepped from the machine.

As compared with the 21 hours it took the old "Southern Cross" to fly from Suva to Brisbane in 1928, the present hop occupied only 12 hours 5 minutes.

The machine behaved perfectly during the whole flight, the weather, unlike that encountered on the memorable Suva-Brisbane flight, being clear. —United Press.

LESSON SERMON.

FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST, HONGKONG

"Doctrine of Atonement" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, yesterday.

The Golden Text was "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark 10:45).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved" (John 3:16,17).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "While we adore Jesus, and the heart overflows with gratitude for what he did for mortals,—treading alone his loving pathway up to the throne of glory, in speechless agony exploring the way for us,—yet Jesus spares us not one individual experience, if we follow his commands faithfully; and all have the cup of sorrowful effort to drink in proportion to their demonstration of his love, till all are redeemed through divine Love" (p. 26).

MOTOR-DRIVING TESTS

There cannot be many respects in which Hongkong gives the lead to the Mother Country, but in one instance at least this Colony has long enforced regulation which the Ministry of Transport contemplates putting into effect. This is the submission of applicants for driving licences to tests of their fitness to handle motor vehicles. Such tests have long been in vogue in many continental countries and are said to have been responsible for reducing the number of accidents on the roads. It is doubtless the relative failure of all other measures to make roads safer which has now induced the Ministry of Transport to draft regulations on the subject and to circulate them to motoring organisations. The steps already taken have prevented the number of traffic casualties from increasing to any marked extent, but the public is demanding that still more should be done than to stabilise the accident rate at its present alarming level. The new regulations are designed to ensure in new applicants for licences a certain minimum efficiency in the handling of their vehicles, since it is expected that the raw beginner will have to shed a good deal of his rawness before he is let loose on the roads. Obviously, that will still leave a large part of the problem untouched, especially as it is intended to apply the regulations only to newcomers. These should start off with a keener sense of their responsibilities than has been the case hitherto. But the vast majority of present licence-holders will not be affected by the change, in which connection it is worth bearing in mind that hitherto any individual, even though he might be deaf or crippled in such a manner as to make it impossible for him to exercise complete control over his car, has been able to obtain a licence by merely filling in a form and paying the necessary fee. When all is said and done, whatever the restrictions imposed may be, the human element enters very largely into this question. Useful as tests are, it is conceivable that an individual might pass them with flying colours and still be a menace to other road-users. The selfish, impetuous, or reckless driver is not magically

NOTES OF THE DAY

BRITISH BUSINESS

Britain, both in the value of its overseas trade and in the profits of its industries is shown by the past half year's statistics to be still upon the upgrade. Foreign trade of £262,000,000 for the six months ending June 30, 1934, was larger by £50,000,000 than in the corresponding period of 1933, a weekly financial journal were 13 per cent. better than in the same period a year ago. Overseas commerce as measured by the Government Board of Trade was up by 13 per cent. in the import column and by 8 per cent in that of exports. The increase in imports was largely in raw materials, that in £25,000,000 out of £42,000,000.

MORE TREATIES

Restrictions making for ultimate freedom of trade were seen at London in recently signed Anglo-French and other trade treaties, says the Christian Science Monitor's correspondent in London. And he goes on to explain: These treaties are bastions in an amazingly complicated series of defensive trade walls that are being built up around Britain. The walls are in four distinguishable lines. The innermost and lowest wall was erected in February, 1932, when Britain left its traditional policy of free trade and resorted to tariffs. It is to protect United Kingdom farmers and manufacturers against "dumping" from abroad. The next wall is somewhat higher. It was an outcome of the British Empire Conference at Ottawa in July, 1932. It gives in Britain to British overseas Empire products advantages second only to those retained for goods produced at home.

SPECIAL MEASURES

The wall of which the Anglo-French pact forms part is yet higher. It applies to the goods of those foreign states that have entered into special agreements with Britain. These agreements provide for such mutual advantages on both sides as have proved feasible without infringing those reserved by Britain for home and Empire producers. The fourth wall is still more lofty. It includes the special tariff imposed on July 4, 1932, by Britain for purposes of debt collection, against the Irish Free State. It also covers the clearing house and other arrangements approved by the British Parliament in June, 1934, for use against Germany. The British system as a whole comprises not only tariffs but also "quotas" that is, quantitative limitations of imports. The "quotas" are being used chiefly in the interests of British farmers, who are designed to raise home prices of such agricultural products as bacon and butter. There are also British state subsidies of various kinds, as, for example, for home-produced wheat and sugar.

BACK TO BARTER

The pacts with outside nations give to foreign goods strictly limited access—preferably in British ships—to the British market. In exchange, Britain has bargained for similar access to foreign markets. The Anglo-French pact admits French silks to Britain on easy terms. British coal and other goods enjoy increased sales in France. Direct exchange of British coal for certain classes of French timber is also provided for. An Anglo-Russian agreement conditions the amount of British purchases of Soviet goods by that of United Kingdom products bought by Russia. An object here aimed at has been to increase British exports to Russia to a level commensurate with that of United Kingdom imports of Soviet commodities. An Anglo-Danish pact provides for Britain to buy a guaranteed proportion of its foreign supplies of bacon, hams, eggs and fish from Denmark. In return, Denmark agrees to absorb increased quantities of such British goods as iron, steel and coal. An Anglo-Argentine pact adds to similar arrangements a provision to facilitate the transfer of payments in satisfaction of British monetary claims. Anglo-Swedish, Anglo-Norwegian, Anglo-German and Finnish agreements of an analogous kind are also in force. Ones with Poland and Holland are pending.

banished by seeing that he passes a certain standard of driving ability. Temperaments and manners are not easily controlled by Government regulation—a fact which has often been illustrated in this Colony. Tests of fitness have a useful part to play in regard to motor-driving, but there is no one all-sufficient remedy for the menace of road casualties. The remedy has to be sought along several parallel lines. In the last resort, the psychological aspect of the problem will always be more intractable than the merely physical.

SHIFTING SAND OF EUROPE'S POLITICS

FOR a moment—perhaps for more than a moment—the Disarmament Conference shrank into something of secondary importance in the eyes of European diplomats. The pursuit of peace along that road, while other roads lay unexplored, seemed to be leading into a blind alley; and the noise of the next war, for those who listen in to the future, seemed to be growing louder and more terrifying. The Disarmament Conference was breaking itself upon the demands of Germany for rearmament and France for security—or, broadly speaking, on the recurrent, incompatible claims of those who lost something by the peace treaties of 1919, and hope to something by the same treaties, and are intent on holding it.

For 15 years these incompatibilities have governed the history of Europe, determining its negotiations, its conferences, its armaments and even its economies. Redress, security—security, redress; such has been the dingdong behind the European controversy since the war. Disarmament after long delays and dawned upon the scene as a means of diminishing if not preventing the force of the clash. It now gives place again to security, and to a new scheme devised by France to promote it: Make war too dangerous to be tried—then, perhaps, we shall be secure, and disarmament may follow. That is the implication of the French proposals for an "Eastern Locarno."

Nine years have passed since three peace-loving statesmen—Stresemann, Briand and Sir Austen Chamberlain—devised the Treaty of Locarno. It appeared to provide a solution of France's repeated demand for security. Again and again she had asked that Britain should give her a guarantee of assistance against Germany. It was a commitment which Britain was unwilling to undertake. But substitute for this one-sided alignment of defence a triangular balance of forces—Britain guaranteeing France against aggression from Germany, and Germany against aggression from France, and so on, each guarantee acting through the League and in accordance with the decision of the League—that avoided all the danger of an alliance, and constituted a limited regional commitment to put force at the disposal of the League of Nations if peace were violated. That pact was made, and stands. It was a regional contribution toward the idea of the collective guarantee of peace.

But that is not enough for France. France to-day is more afraid of National Socialism—Germany than she was nine years ago of a Germany for which Herr Stresemann was the spokesman. She has been looking once again to old allies in central Europe, to Poland and the Little Entente and Yugoslavia, all of which hold the peace treaties. France has turned also to a still more powerful state which has been brought nearer to her by reason of new fears, namely, Russia, the Russia which dreads Japan and desires security in Europe in case she should become involved in the Far East.

It may or may not have been the case that the late M. Louis Barthou's dramatic visits to central and eastern European capitals originally had for their aim the strengthening of old alliances and the introduction of Russia as a new force on the side of France. But whatever his original intention may have been, the French Foreign Minister devised a far happier plan for guaranteeing peace in central Europe, a plan which claimed to be based on the reciprocal method of Locarno.

Germany naturally viewed with alarm the first flamboyant speeches made by M. Barthou. She saw herself centrally situated in Europe with France and Belgium on one side, potentially hostile; Czechoslovakia on the south, Poland and the Baltic States on the east, and behind them all Russia; a ring of force encircling her on all sides. And her fears were shared by Hungary, whose ministers saw the threatening vision of the three powers of the Little Entente, allies of France, drawing their circle around her.

Germany isolated—Hungary isolated—that was the cry that went up in Berlin. And Britain, profoundly distrustful as she is of the Hitler methods of government, saw the danger: "We cannot consent to give any continuance to a policy for isolating and encircling Germany."

M. Barthou thereupon hurried from Paris to London. That he explained, was not his intention. His policy, on the contrary, was one for the mutual provision of guarantees against war, and it was of the essence of the scheme that Germany itself was to be a partner in it. He had in mind an "Eastern Locarno" for Germany, the Baltic States, Poland and Czechoslovakia, consisting of all-round mutual guarantees to give assistance against an aggressor. To this was added a further proposal that Russia should guarantee Germany against aggression from Germany, while France should offer the same guarantees to Germany and Russia. Russia, and no doubt also Germany, would in this case be expected to join the League of Nations, and that institution would provide the machinery by which the whole balance of guarantees would operate.

So apparently fair, so all-round, so promising a scheme for regional agreements to secure peace was one which Britain could not but encourage. Sir John Simon welcomed the scheme at once. It was welcomed by all parties in the House of Commons. And with a united Parliament and apparently a united country behind him the British Foreign Minister had no hesitation in offering to use his good offices to persuade Germany to look favourably on the plan.

Supposing all these countries should approve, all supposing all should sign the pact, would it not provide in the East and in the West of Europe something approaching that ideal of the collective guarantee of peace which has been so long desired? No doubt, this means guarantees of force. But how else could peace be insured? Would it not make possible a new beginning for the pursuit of disarmament, resting upon the equality of Germany and the removal of France's fears?

Great Britain was surely right in favouring M. Barthou's proposals. She accepted no new commitments herself, and her approval was dependent on the condition that Germany should be willing to

The Very Idea!

NOW YOU TELL ONE, BETTY!

By Eddie "do Mille" Kelly
IF you had listened hard enough on Thursday night while Betty Compton was broadcasting from ZBW you would have heard a slight commotion. It was only as trying to get in to tell our Great and Admiring Public about our talkie career. That there was champagne and cocktails there has nothing to do with it.

PERHAPS it is because our beauty is fading a little that these people seem to forget that we were once a Mae West. One has to resign oneself to that sort of thing and be content with memories.

That's all we have now. Our memories and our press clippings.

And yet, when we come to think of it, we were lucky to get out of Hollywood when we did. A vast concourse of film fans were down at the boat to see us off, but the police rescued us somehow.

Thank heavens, we are finished now with the tinsel and glitter. Soon we shall be going back to our father, the Earl. Back to the old family castle at Lanchikok. A kindly word from Franks, the old retainer. The joyous welcome from Snip, Rover, Fido, Carlo and the rest of our favourite horses—how we look forward to it all!

And yet, shall we miss the old life? Shall we miss the fierce lights of the Klieg? Yes, it seems that we shall.

It seems that yesterday since we were cast out by the casting director. As we think of it, we can still feel the thrill we experienced when we first sang "Mother, Get the Flit, There's a Fly on Father's Philz", the Theme Song of "20,000 Years on the Peak".

Even the directors broke down. Hard-bitten men, who had been right through the war or who had married, sobbed like little children. When the last note died away they came to us in a body whimpering and asked us never to do it again. It was shortly after this that we were starred in "The Silent Voice."

We often laugh cynically as we glance back over our press notices. We will give you a few extracts: "The best part of The Spot Marked XXX" was undoubtedly in the second reel, when Kelly was murdered. If we might say so, the succeeding attempts to trace the murderer were half-hearted. "All I can say is, 'My God, what a film!'"

"Kelly gave a powerful impersonation of the silent voice in 'The Silent Voice'. There should be more talkies like this."

"The stampe to the Bar in 'The Face on a Bar-room Floor' was realistic. Kelly's struggle to reach the Bar was vividly real."

"We could go on for hours. And then we ask ourselves, why should we go on for hours? And we wait vainly for an answer."

"What awaits one in Hollywood?" we have frequently been asked.

"Naught but disillusionment," we have replied, burying our head in our hands.

When we were ghosting for Mae West we suffered such emotional stress that frequently we had to leave the set. We were shot four times in one scene. They said it was temperamental, but we knew it was their rotten run.

Our best role was when we were ghosted for the Invisible Man. We got a lot of fun out of that. For instance, Mae West once approached us when we were doing this particular bit of ghost work.

"Why don't you come up and see me sometime?" she whispered.

"Too late, Mae," we replied, "we've been up three times already."

Still, we suppose success like this is not given to all of us, but don't you girls get downhearted.

Don't be disappointed if you fail to become a talkie star immediately. Get married!

Easy Pickings.

Hon. Frank D. Abell:

Dear Senator:

I am interested in your investigation of the Port of New York Authority.

It has been noised about town for a long time that "pickings" on the bridge was great.

From my observations a man cannot work for $85 per week and enjoy the following luxuries: Pay board, buy a new automobile, frequent cabarets and speakies, entertain ladies, pay for the upkeep of a car, neither can he afford to go to a speakie put a $100 bill down on the bar and stay until the $100 is licked up.

Trusting that this information will be of some value to you,

The former President of the Republic of France, M. Raymond Poincaré, was laid to his last rest in the family vault of the village cemetery at Nibecourt, today.

Only the members of the statesman's family and his old colleagues, M. Herriot and M. Tardieu, attended the brief ceremonies at which the Bishop of Verdun officiated. The service was extremely simple in accordance with M. Poincaré's wishes.

President of France during the War and a premier before and after the outbreak of hostilities, M. Poincaré was one of the best known of contemporary statesmen, not only of France but of all the world. He was known for the courage of his policies and his tireless energy, and was one of the most able orators of his time. —Reuter Special.

The Anti-Saloon League, right wing of the Prohibitionists' attacking forces, is once again campaigning intensively for reform, maintaining that with the breaking up of the racketeering gangs which controlled the illicit liquor trade during the days of the Volstead Act's life, the country is now safe for prohibition. —United Press.

AMERICAN STOCK OUTLOOK

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR SPRING

New York, Oct. 20.

Market influences remain predominantly constructive, but considerable further backing and filling is likely. Underlying business forces should justify irregular strengthening of prices over the next several months in anticipation of another important business recovery next spring.

Need for selectivity is particularly important under the type of market now prevailing in which activity should be concentrated in relatively few issues and trading volume restricted.

The following stocks are recommended for purchase as offering the dual attraction of adequate current income plus reasonable appreciation possibilities: American Machine and Foundry, Coca-Cola, Cream of Wheat, General Foods, Hercules Powder, Kresge, Penick and Ford, J. C. Penney, Procter and Gamble, and Wrigley.

General bond prospects appear definitely improved. Purchase of both high and medium quality issues are justified but individual investors should continue to concentrate bond holdings in the middle group. —Sloan, Culbertson and Fritz.

SOUTH CHINA RETAIN THEIR 100 PER CENT RECORD

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN FORWARD LINE

Fulfill Nearly All Demands Of Match Winning Game

NAVY NOT FREQUENTLY IMPRESSIVE

(By "Veritas").

Faster and cleverer in every phase of the game, South China first string yesterday piled on four goals against the Navy without reply and thus retained their 100 per cent. record at the same time challenging the "B" team for the leadership.

With the exception of Wong Mo-shun, the Chinese were at full strength, but the Navy had several alterations, and were quite a different team to that which did service against St. Joseph's a week ago. They called on the assistance of several players from H.M.S. Eagle and the Adventure, and although they have promise of settling down into a sound combination given sufficient practice, there was no gainsaying that yesterday they were vastly inferior to the Chinese.

The return of South China's Canton players made all the difference. Life was infused into the forward line, and once the attack had obtained the full measure of the Navy's defence, they gave an artistic and thrilling display.

Fung King-cheung's leadership was reminiscent of that player at his best, which was roughly three years ago. He led his wings with brilliant accuracy and skill, and in the later stages of the game treated the excited spectators to some fireworks shooting.

MOST IMPRESSIVE FEATURE. The most impressive feature of the Chinese, in fact, was the real improvement noted among the forwards. The rest of the team played as usual—first rate. The defence was a solid as the Bank of England, and the half backs so firm that the efforts of the Navy forwards to break through reminded one of a sea dashing against breakwaters.

The work of Wong Wing, Li Tinsang and Lau Mau was never promiscuous, but it was doubly effective for its quietness and efficiency. Li Tinsang was a tower of strength and at no time were he and his colleagues in danger.

Leung Wing-chui, taking over his favourite position at centre-half, played his best game for many moons. His big, and only fault, was a continual technical breach of the rules in headwork, when, in an enthusiasm to beat the man for the ball, he allowed his elbows to fly and his shoulders to dig in his opponent's back.

Leung should set out to restrain himself, for any advantage he obtains from securing the ball from these wild leaps, is nullified by the foul. This applies, in a lesser degree, to Li Kwok-wai, and in greater degree to Tay Qua-tong.

Tay continues to indulge in that foolish practice of jumping at the man. It is dangerous, unnecessary and an insult to his own footballing ability. When will some kind authority take him quietly aside and point this out to him?

NOTHING BUT ADMIRATION! Beyond this I have nothing but admiration for the splendid football served up by South China yesterday. They fulfilled pretty nearly all the demands of a match-winning game. The ball was moved quickly and accurately from player to player. Although the first half revealed a tendency to persist in fancy work at the expense of shooting when in front of goal, the closing chapters saw the forwards seizing every opportunity to test Pepper, and three goals in the second half is sufficient testimony to the benefit of such tactics.

Ip Pak-wah was a definite success at inside left, although it is probable that this versatile player could play anywhere in the attack with the same amount of achievement. He, Fung and Tam Kong-pak were as full of constructive ideas as a refrigerator of cold air.

Tam was especially unselfish, and in addition to keeping two Kwai-shing busy with ideal "through" passes, scored a glorious goal with his head. The whole art of Tam's headwork (incomparable in local football) is, in his unassuming, anticipation, which allows him to beat a much taller player for the ball. He is also blessed with the knack of twisting his neck at the right moment to obtain direction from well nigh impossible angles.

TIRELESS WORKERS. That the Navy were without

CAER CLARK CUP SEASON OPENS

C.B.A.'S BIG WIN

In the first game of the Caer Clark Cup competition played at King's Park on Saturday the Central British Association trounced the C.B.A. to the tune of ten goals to one.

E. Woolley was principal goal getter scoring eight of the ten goals for his side. A. Beavis and M. Smith were responsible for the other two goals. H. Knill netted the only goal for the Schoolgirls from a penalty Bully against F. K.

GAMBLE GIVES LIE DIRECT

PLAYS ONE OF BEST GAMES IN LOCAL FOOTBALL

LINCOLNS LACK UNITY

HOWE'S three goals on Saturday at the expense of the Lincoln, put the Club up to second place in the league table for 24 hours, after which they were displaced by South China, who netted four times against the Navy, and now boast the best goal average in the division.

THE Club were value for their points, but hardly to the extent of three clear goals. Glaring errors on the part of the soldier's vanguard quintette were chiefly instrumental in the Club leaving the field with their citadel intact. On the other hand, full credit must be given to Rodger, Gamble and Strange for their sturdy defending.

GAMBLE gave the lie direct to the critics by playing one of his best games in local football. He was splendidly stubborn and kicked a fine line.

ALL round there was nothing much wrong with the Club. They played according to the demands of the occasion, which were not so great as if they had been opposed by South China or the Borderers. The forwards were lively, but had not their movements under control all the time. Baldwin was neat and efficient on the left wing, and Ernest Strange indulged in his favourite perigrinations, sometimes with conspicuous success, and at other times.

HOWE'S best work was in the scoring of three goals, and you can't say much more than that! On the other hand he did not send one into raptures with his mid-field and approach work. It was methodical, but apt to be slow. Bert Albert has no cause to get worried over this criticism. After all he scored three goals.

THE Lincoln's lacked unity, and this in addition to many faults in shooting. There were some outstanding individuals, such as Ridley, Ash, Dudley and Higgins, but four or five players don't make a team, and absence of co-operation and co-ordination among the rest of the players contributed largely to the defeat.

THE crying need with them is an organized plan of attack. Too many ideas, of a contrasting nature, are allowed to be floated at the same time, and the result is generally chaos. Some attention to this factor might well repay the soldiers, who certainly boast some fine players.

SOMETIMES football teams seize the opportunity to have a good laugh on the critics, and Kowloon certainly had theirs on Saturday, when, against all earlier form they beat the East Lancashire by the old goal in three.

It was an entirely different team which delighted supporters of the Railway Ground Club. Gone was the haphazard and desultory movements of the previous weeks. The attack, well led by G. White, created a new impression. There was cohesion and intelligence in their constructive approach play. White capped a great afternoon's work by scoring twice, but he was always ably supported by Elliott, and the Knox brothers on opposite wings.

THE defence played with more determination than hitherto, and refused to yield an inch to the sprightly, but rather inconclusive movements of the East Lancashire forwards. Enneman and Everest were outstanding, and Bliss a hard worker.

WALKER. RECREIO LADIES WIN. The Club de Recreio Ladies defeated the Y.M.C.A. Ladies in a friendly game at the Police Training School on Saturday by one goal to nil. C. Silva netted the only goal scored in the first half.

St. Andrew's Ladies defeated the Club de Recreio Ladies second string by three clear goals on the Marina ground. M. Woolley and E. Landolt and I. Rogers scored for the winners.

The Y.M.C.A. men's "A" team defeated H.M.S. Verity by seven goals to nil.

CLUB OPEN SEASON WITH TWO WINS

The first team game was fast and mainly featured by the splendid work of the Club pack, and the excellent tackling and kicking by the Navy.

The Navy opened with a try by Sowden, Meeke equalising a few minutes later with an unconverted try. During the second half Franks gave the Navy the lead again with a try which Suther converted. Bramble was next over for the Club, a try which Peers failed to convert. Walkden then gave the club the lead and Robertson added the extras. Before time Warren scored another three points for the Navy, while Suther majorised and Ferguson scored the winning try for the Club in the last minute of the game for Robertson to convert.

ARSENAL VICTORY OVER SPURS

MAINTAIN LEAD AT HEAD OF FIRST DIVISION

IRELAND BEATS SCOTLAND

The overwhelming victory of the Arsenal over Tottenham Hotspur at Highbury on Saturday has enabled the champions to maintain their lead in the First Division, by a single point. Stoke are their nearest rivals now.

A crowd of over 35,000 spectators visited Windsor Park, Belfast on Saturday to see the defeat of Scotland at the hands of Ireland in their International fixture, by two goals to one.

The victory was greeted with the wildest enthusiasm. Last year Ireland returned the same score against Scotland. Hugh Callaghan (Chelsea) opened the scoring for Scotland five minutes before the interval. D. Martin (Belfast Celtic) qualified from a melee ten minutes from the end and J. Coulter also of Belfast Celtic, gave them victory in the last minute of the game.

GIRL BOUND OVER

THEFT OF JEWELLERY AND MONEY

Li Chui-ha, an 18-year-old girl, appeared before Mr. E. I. Wynne-Jones at the Kowloon Magistracy this morning charged with the theft of Hongkong $100, Shanghai $100, a gold ring set with jade, and a gold expanding bracelet set with jade, the property of Mrs. Cheung Ting-kong, on board the steamer Empress of Canada, on October 12.

Defendant had been remanded from October 15, for further police investigations.

Detective-Sergeant Danbrowsky stated that the defendant and been well brought up, she had received a good education and had never been in trouble before. She had been living with her aunt in Sham-shui-po for 10 years.

In August this year, defendant visited her mother, who lived in the country, and her mother pawned all her jewellery, to enable defendant to go to Shanghai. When defendant arrived in Shanghai she could not find any work, so was forced to return to Hongkong. Defendant came back to Hongkong on the Empress of Canada, and shared the same cabin with the complainant. She committed the theft when the steamer arrived in Hongkong on October 12.

His Worship bound the defendant over in the sum of $100 to come up for judgment within one year. Compensation of $10 was awarded to the complainant for the damage done to her bag.

NEW TERRITORIES ROBBERY

TWO MEN IN DOCK AT SESSIONS

The trial began at the Criminal Sessions this morning of Leung Fuk, alias Leung Tin-fuk, 24, of Lam Tuen, and Wong Shek-cheung, alias Wong Shek, (22), of Tai-po, charged with robbery by two or more.

Prisoners pleaded not guilty and Mr. W. J. Lockhart Smith opened the case on behalf of the Crown before the following jury:—

BANISHEE GETS THREE YEARS

HONGKONG BIRTH CLAIMED

Stated to have a very long record of crime and to have returned five times to the Colony after being banished, Tang Han, alias Tsang F. H. of Sum Chun, received the maximum sentence of three months' hard labour at the Criminal Sessions to-day.

Mr. W. J. Lockhart Smith for the Crown said accused was banished for a term of ten years in February this year and was recognised and arrested by a constable in September. He had been banished on five previous occasions.

Accused pleaded guilty and said that when he was first banished he was too young to know that he could plead Hongkong birth. His parents had visited him recently and told him that he was born in the Colony, and he had also sent a petition to His Excellency the Governor containing this plea.

Mr. Justice Jacks said that if a petition had been sent, it would no doubt be dealt with in due course. In view of prisoner's record he would receive the maximum sentence.

The next day he saw Leung alone and chased him whereupon accused pulled out a revolver and menaced him whilst making his escape. He made a report to the police.

The hearing is proceeding.

ATTACKS WITH SCISSORS

DANGEROUS PRACTICE CONDEMNED

Commenting in the seriousness of attacks with scissors, which he described as dangerous instruments, Mr. Macfadyen, in the Central Police Court this morning, passed sentence of six months' hard labour on Chan Tnk, 32, street coolie, who was convicted on a charge of assaulting Cheung Wah, another coolie at Heung Hing Lane on Saturday.

It was stated that there was a dispute as to the division of wages, and the defendant stabbed the complainant twice in the left side with a pair of scissors.

In a case of disorderly conduct, where scissors figured as weapons, the Magistrate imposed a fine of $100, or in default two months' hard labour, each on Cheng Kam and Li Wah, both barbers.

It was stated by Sub-Inspector Mist that the defendants worked at the Chinese Recreation ground, Hollywood Road. Yesterday morning the second defendant went out and on his return was told by the first defendant that the master had been looking for him. Li Wah accused Cheng Kam of telling tales and an argument arose. Both attacked each other with scissors, but happily with no serious results.

SHROFF SENT TO PRISON

EMBEZZLED OVER $600

"This is a very serious matter, but as you have frankly admitted the charge, and as your chances are ruined, I will give you three months' hard labour," said Mr. E. W. Hamilton, at the Central Magistracy this morning, when passing sentence on Ng Chun-hang, a Shroff employed by the Chu Yuen Hing firm, No. 2 Yiu Wah Street, charged with embezzlement of $610.10 between February 14 and October 20.

It was stated that the defendant was paid a salary of $20 a month, and sometimes used to collect sums of money amounting to $200 or more.
